Father Time has punched the last s on the calendar of 1891, and that on ticket will carry none of us any her To-day the sun rises on a new year. ay the lease of opportunity which we all this day turn out profitably! To all ur readers we wish A Happy New Year.

* * * *

We begin with a fair legacy from the old year. In its actual possessions Eighteen Ninety-two gives better earnest at its outset that it will be a prosperous year than many f its predecessors ever gave. No former year ever succeeded in this country to so full a store of natural products as falls to 1892. The grain yield of the country has been enormous, and most of it is yet in the hands of the growers. This is not a bad place for it to be, if the grain market develops it has all along been expected to develop ring the winter. It is at all events better t we should be able to turn our eyes efully to a large balance from the crop of year than be obliged to turn our fully towards the crop of the new e actual is always better than the s a consequence of our large fruit e been able to do already a lar- siness in apples than we have- ral years past, and we are but midway in the season of the outside demand. Last summer and early fall our butter shipments were surprisingly large, there is reason to believe that English consumers are recovering confidence in our butter, prices have been steadily on the side of fair value, and we turn the year with none of that huge accumulation that has heretofore been a familiar resource of the domestic market at Christmas. Our cheese holds its own abroad, the full season's make is out of the hands of the manufacturers, and prices are good. With the exception of a dull spell in the summer, eggs had a good year of it during 1891, despite the fact that that year was the first one throughout which we shipped to the British market. We have clearly lost nothing for our eggs as a result of the compulsion the McKinley Act placed us under to abandon the United States market. The tariff protection afforded to hog-raising, while it has led to an increase in in the number of hogs fed—the number raised in 1891 exceeding that of 1890 by about one-sixth of the latter—has been prevented from giving undue benefit to a few packers by the increase it has caused in the number of persons who are in that industry. The benefit has accrued mainly to the producer, and therefore acts upon trade very directly. The action of several European countries—Germany, Austria, Italy, and in a less degree France—in removing the prohibition upon United States pork has reduced the strain of United States competition upon this market. The increased duty which the McKinley Act placed on wool and hides has had a depressing effect upon these products. But, taken all in all, the basis of trade is far more substantial and the atmosphere of business more bracing than it was this time last year.

Industrially there has been perhaps no very appreciable advance, if any. But the crops of 1891 have scarcely begun to tell yet upon the output of our manufactories and upon the volume of money the wage-earning class keep afloat in trade. The first of January is an arbitrary breaking, point in the trade year. Speaking roughly, the motive power of whatever trade is transacted lies on one side of that date, and the trade itself on the other. There have been no strikes, at all events, and this is an evidence of content among the working classes that points to fairly satisfactory conditions of employment. Labor generally commanded good pay, and even at the dullest period hands were scarce for harvest work.

In grocery lines the most important event of the year was the removal of the duty upon raw sugar. That, and the uncommonly large crop of summer fruits, were the causes of the great trade in sugar during July and August, during which the volume sold far exceeded that of any former summer. The British Columbia salmon pack has been but an average one, while the lobster pack was short. The extent of the canned vegetable pack was for a considerable time a perplexing factor in the situation for buyers, but it is evidently now a settled conviction that it is not excessive. The year is remarkable for the bareness of the market at the time of natural renewal, and consequently for its very large consumption of canned goods. The dried fruit crop of the year was large, and prices ruled low. The large yield of California raisins caused a vast shrinkage in the United States demand for Valencias, and this, together with the large crop in Spain, the surplus of old stock carried from 1890, and the large proportion of inferior fruit, caused a remarkable weakness in prices. The prices of tea have been on the easy side, mainly on account of the competition among importers. Lower freights since we have begun to receive direct by the Pacific and C. P. R. route have something to do with this. There has been some internal increase in the production of certain lines. More canneries were at work last year; there were also more evaporating houses. In Quebec beet root sugar was successfully grown on an encouraging scale, and a refinery at Farnham was put in operation in the fall. The economy and utility of this sugar, in comparison with the product of sugar-cane, are not yet settled. A new refinery, the British Columbia Sugar Refinery, has been at work throughout the year in the east.

The political events and tendencies of the year that have had a marked bearing upon trade have not been as numerous as they have been important. The agitation of a plan for facilitating trade among all parts of the British Empire has roused considerable interest in this country, and is meeting with more encouragement in England since the conclusion of the great Zollverein of Central Europe, which, along with the McKinley Act, must have the effect of narrowing Britain's markets and probably tend to increase trade relations among the parts of the Empire. Pointing in the direction of the latter object is the request made by the Canadian Parliament at its last session, that the Imperial Government do not embody the most favored nation clause in the renewals of existing commercial treaties with certain European countries. Overtures have also been made from this side for the establishment of a measure of trade reciprocity between Canada and the United States, but no progress has been made. The last important event in commercial politics has been the disagreement with Newfoundland, the Government of that colony provoking this country to retaliate by imposing a duty on Newfoundland fish, which course was followed by a reprisal in the form of a heavy increase of duty upon Canadian flour and certain other products imported into Newfoundland.

As to the record of the retail grocers and general merchants of the country during the past year, the failures have been quite numerous, but with a few very notable exceptions they have been for comparatively small amounts. Credit is generally given with more caution. To the retailers it has been limited throughout the year to the terms adopted by the Guild. Several of the millers have made a departure in the matter of selling flour to grocers on time. Collections have been slow. Buying by retailers has been largely non-speculative and in small parcels. The early closing movement was very considerably extended last summer. Association-forming made progress in the towns. A preliminary convention was held in this city, at which leading associations were represented, and arrangements are under consideration for larger meetings of a like nature. The peddling question has been a prominent one under the consideration of the trade. A new element of antagonism to the trade, an association called the Patrons of Industry, has gained ground in territory, but perhaps not in power to do mischief. How the year's returns compare with those of other years, has to be learnt by the results of the annual inventories of individual traders.

NOW FOR THE INVENTORY.

Usage has fixed the first of the year as the time for traders to take the value of all the assets they have in their business. It would seem to correspond better with the course of nature if the beginning of a new trade year, instead of a new calendar year, were chosen as the time for stock-taking, as the trade year is marked out by the coming in of the staple crops of the country and by the more or less complete exhaustion of old year natural products. Just with the country's last instalment of resources, it seems fitting that the trader should begin afresh and take due note of what he has to begin with. But a more important thing than agreement with nature is agreement among the trade upon the matter, as it is desirable that the merchants of the country should conform to a common usage in respect to the time for stock-taking. This they do, and that is the main thing. It is possible that every trader is now so far abreast of the times as to be in the yearly habit of taking an inventory of all his mercantile belongings. If there are some who do not observe this salutary and necessary custom, it is time they got about it. The man who does not take stock must grope his way. He cannot properly direct his business. A veil of ignorance covers a multitude of dangers if the trader does not clearly inform himself as to his position once a year. There are some people superstitious enough to believe in going it blind. They go on buying and selling, they spend money freely upon the necessaries and the extras of life, and the business stands it. Their fortune works itself out in the dark, and they are happy in their ignorance of how they escape pitfalls. The thing usually ends badly, and is certainly not to be trusted. Good, plain old-fashioned thrift, no matter how much discounted by some people who have realized sudden success, is the very best principle a man can have at work in his affairs. If he has not this his business is apt to go to pieces in the long run. A spur to the exercise of thrift is a knowledge of one's weakness. That can be got only by taking an inventory at least once a year. Then the trader can see if last year's profits, business methods, concession of credit, standard of living, etc., can be maintained for another year, or if any or all need to be modified. The inventory is full of lessons for the trader, and is a most conservative influence in business. The man is at a disadvantage who begins the year without its wholesome enlightenment. The inventory includes not only stock-taking but a summary of the results of the year's business. In the January review of his position the trader ought to bring out clearly how much he started the year with (i. e., the result of last year's stock taking), and the quantity of stock bought during the year closed ; against this should be the total sales of the year, and the value of the stock entered in the sheets now being made up. The difference will be the gross profit on the year's business,and against this are to be set the year's expenses—as bad debts, interest, freight, advertising, salaries, postage, etc.—and the difference will be the net profit or loss. To get at the desired information as to the issue of the year's business the books should be in first-rate shape, as the stock should be well-disposed for the purposes of stock-taking. If the trader finds that the sales of the last six months do not total up as much as those of the last half of 1890 or any average year, he should not be disheartened. He has probably sold more stock, but he should remember that the great staple, sugar, went down in price at the beginning of the half year as a consequence of the removal of the duty. Instead $18 to $21 per barrel, sugar has sold at $12 to $15 per barrel.

Preparations for taking stock ought to precede the work itself. The goods should be grouped so as to facilitate entering. One man should do the entering on an improvised pad of heavy, properly ruled paper tacked to a board back, and as each sheet is filled with entries it may be detached and passed to somebody else for pricing, extending and adding. The contents of the stock sheets should be arranged under headings to indicate the locality where the goods are kept, as Left Shelving, Cellar, etc. A plan of operations ought to be sketched out at the beginning to introduce order into the work. There will be a good deal of more or less shopworn, damaged, or superannuated stock discovered. This should be thrown together and put aside by itself as a bargain stock to bring out in dull times or catch a purchaser who wants abnormally easy prices. Notes should be made, not upon the inventory but in a book kept for entering Wants, etc., if any shortages are revealed in the stock-taking. Goods have to be on sale all the time the entering is going on. If sales are made from goods already entered, alterations should not be made in the figures upon the sheets, but the value to be deducted with a minus sign before it should be entered in the margin beside the entry for such goods. Errors should be corrected in the same way, placing the plus sign before amounts to be added. The total result of such additions and subtractions should be collected at the end and added to or subtracted from, as required, the aggregate of the stock-taking. Five per cent should be deducted from the total result of the sheets for shrinkage or other losing factor.

THE MERCHANT'S IDEAL.

"An ideal, far in advance of practicability though it may be, is always needful for right guidance." These are the words of one of England's philosophers, and there is no valid reason why even a philosopher's wisdom may not be turned to account by the practical man of business. Unless a business man sets a goal, he will not know how nor where to direct his course. The merchant should have his ideal in business as much as a poet, a painter, or a philosopher in their respective vocations.

To take a walk down the business street of any town is to find that different merchants have different ideals. Some show extreme care of outward appearances. A prominent, attractive sign, a neatly painted front, a well-dressed window, a well-arranged out-door display—these are the signs by which the passer-by may judge of the merchant's ideal. A dingy front and a poor, weather-worn display will not attract customers nor increase a merchant's reputation. It may save trouble and expense, but a dollar saved in this way is not a dollar earned. Then, when the interior of a store shows careful planning and artistic execution, it may be certain that the merchant or his head clerk has an ideal,and that a high one.

Every merchant should aim to have his store the best of its kind in the town. His capital may be smaller than that of his competitor, but he must use it to the greatest possible advantage, making up for this disadvantage by extra careful management. His store may not be the largest, but the largest knife will not always do the most cutting. The way in which space is utilized in a store overcomes difficulties as to lack of space. The situation may not be the most convenient for his business but he must make up for this by increased attractiveness. His clerks should be the best procurable. Do not keep a poor clerk from a mere desire to avoid the trouble of filling his place. A merchant must also have his ideal as to how his customers should be treated, how their orders should be executed, how their wishes should be gratified, and how their custom should be retained. He should know how a good business should be managed, financially and otherwise, and to find out this he must profit by the expe rience of others, which he should be always seeking to discover, and by his own experience. The wide awake merchant must be always learning from contact with others who have had the experience he is trying to gain.

To accomplish all this, he should set a high ideal before him and daily try to attain that high standard. The nigher the standard, the greater the attempts to attain it. He must be enthusiastic in his business, and his whole energy must bend towards the making this business a successful one. Mediocrity is to be shunned. Aim high and gain the height, or at least come so near it that you may have the satisfaction of looking down the rugged road and of feeling that you have traversed a goodly distance.

THE VICTIMS OF THE PATRONS.

Mr. R. J. McLoughlin, Wallaceburg, Ont., writes a letter which we print on another page, with every expectation that it will do good wherever it is read. There has been a great deal of clamor about the campaign the Patrons are carrying on against independent traders. The formation of every new lodge is hailed with an uproar of rejoicing that swells from one side of the province to the other; the local press starts the cry, and the metropolitan papers re-echo it, until the public begin to think that the Patrons are carrying everything before them. From the assailed trade, on the other hand, there is only now and then an audible murmur, and this silence tends to confirm onlookers in the opinion the fuss of the Patrons is calculated to scatter abroad, that the latter are having it all their own way. The trade ought to be, if not equally vociferous, at all events equally prominent in the struggle, and then no credit would be given to the Patrons for their superior aggressiveness. Such facts as Mr. McLoughlin brings before the attention of his fellow-traders are never mentioned by the Patrons. If they are not made conspicuous by the trade, they will never leak out to forewarn and encourage men who have yet to face the temptation or the co-ercion of Patron agents. To check this movement it is the duty of all who know anything of the association to put it at the service of their fellow-merchants. Our colums are open.

The movement is not to be dreaded for its permanency — for that is a property that is not inherent in it and that cannot be accidental to it—but for its disastrous effects upon trade while it exists. Its track will be marked by more sepulchres of ruined businesses before those are through with it who have foolishly embraced it. A Patron store is the tomb, not the nursery, of business, and the sad epitaph on the three stores whose former owners have been obliged to give up the struggle in Wallaceburg will be the death sentence of the Patrons throughout this country in a very short time. But one short year sufficed to hurry into hopeless insolvency two men whose reputed business sagacity led to their appointment to the chief offices in a local business men's association. This ought to be instructive and admonitory reading for some weak-kneed traders, who are wavering towards the side of the Patrons. Mr. McLoughlin's clearly-worded, well-written letter ought to be pondered by every one in the trade.

SOUND ADVICE.

In the American Cultivator of the 19th inst. the following sterling advice to farmers appears:

"The advice not to get trusted, and to buy only what you have money to pay for immediately, is for most of the year much easier to give than to act upon. A large proportion of American farmers begin and work through life with too little capital. They buy too much land in the first place, and to make this land productive are obliged to borrow money to stock and work it. Even then they usually borrow less than profitable management of the land requires. The result is a multitude of petty debts that harass worse than large debts, are more often the subject of disagreements, and prevent farmers from one year's end to another from knowing exactly how they stand financially. No good business man will allow himself to remain long in such financial condition as this. He will pay off the numerous small debts, even if he has to borrow the money in a lump to do so. At this season of the year, and through the winter, money is more plentiful with farmers than at other times. It ought to be possible for most of them to hold in reserve money sufficient to pay cash for all they need to buy. They will probably buy rather less paying cash than if they received credit. What they buy for cash will be at a large reduction, more than enough in most cases to leave a good profit after deducting legal interest on borrowed money."

If to the foregoing had been added the injunction to practice rigid economy until the burden of debt has disappeared, the paragraphs would have deserved a place in every farmer's scrap-book or a frame upon his living-room wall. As it is, it merits the highest praise, and the lesson it teaches might be learned by many merchants to their great pecuniary advantage not to mention the freedom from the mental strain and the annoyances produced by a number of petty debts.

Too many of the farmers' organs seldom refer to the farmers' indebtedness except when in need for a text for articles denouncing the "middleman" and the "bloated" mortgage holder. How much wiser is the policy of the Cultivator, which offers valuable suggestions instead of indulging in diatribes against perfectly innocent people, and advocating the formation of Alliance exchanges and other schemes for the extermination of the middleman. With the exception of wage-earners who are paid at intervals of a fortnight or more, and of farmers who seem to be, as a rule, destitute of cash except immediately after harvest, the people who actually need credit from retail merchants are not numerous, and if with the passage and enforcement of a weekly payment law, and the acquirement of businesslike and thrifty habits by the farmers, the necessity for granting credit to those two classes could be obviated, a general system of strictly cash dealing could be established, to the betterment of every branch of trade, and an improvement of the purchasing power or the condition of consumers, owing to the lower prices at which cash sales can be made.—Merchants' Review.

THE DECAY OF PATRON STORES.

WALLACEBURG, Ont., Dec. 22, 1891.

Editor of THE CANADIAN GROCER :

SIR,—From perusal of Mr. Weismiller's letter in a recent issue of THE GROCER, I am led to give you, for the benefit of the trade generally, a short history of that very ephemeral organization known to fame as "The Patrons of Industry." As I will give nothing but facts, I must perforce detail only what has come under my own observation here. About one year ago the pestiferous thing first made its appearance in the townships adjacent and tributary to our town. This section was, I believe, one of the earliest visited by the "organizers," who hailed from Michigan, only a few miles distant from us. You will probably remember that I wrote a short letter to THE GROCER at that time under the nom de plume of "Merchant," counselling united and determined opposition to "the Patrons" on the part of all merchants. In that letter I also stated that the only two merchants in our town who could be found to take up the Patrons were the President and Vice-President of a so-called Business Men's Association which had been organized here a short time previous.

Only one little year since these events occurred, and what do we find now? The aforesaid president and vice-president both failed and out of business, as well as a third foolish merchant who listened to the voice of the charmer and marred a hitherto unsullied business record by pandering to the selfishness of the Patrons of Industry. With these three victims lying hors de combat, and fortunately no others being available to take their places, the Patrons have come to an abrupt and inglorious ending here. Almost daily we are informed of lodges that have been broken up and scattered. In fact it has been a complete rout of horse, foot and artillery.

Now why could not this have been accomplished one year ago? Why could not the "Patrons" have received their death blow then, instead of having been permitted to gratify their inordinate selfishness for a twelve-month to the utter ruin of three of our business men? Simply because there was not unanimity in opposing them. Had all the merchants refused to sell them goods at 12½ per cent. advance on invoice price (which any sensible man knows is selling at a loss), I have no doubt the three insolvent ones referred to would be still in business, and every one else engaged in trade in our town much better off to-day.

In recounting the somewhat short-lived career of Patron-ism here, believe me, Mr. Editor, I am actuated only by motives of true devotion to the best interests of Canadian merchants, in whose ranks I have stood for a good many years, and to whose welfare I, long since, became sincerely attached, during a very pleasant part of my life spent amongst them on the road as "A Knight of the Grip." I remain, very sincerely, etc.,

R. J. MCLOUGHLIN.

MY LATE PARTNER.

The selection of my late partner was the result of mature deliberation on my part, and all the resources at my command were called into play to thoroughly investigate his character. All I could learn of him, together with surface indications, led me to believe that he was honest and honorable. I accepted his statement that he desired to engage in the retail business. After several years' experience in this line I had accumulated sufficient capital to start half a store, hence my need of a partner. A mutual friend suggested our names to each other, and the matter of joining forces was taken under advisement. My proposed partner was head bookkeeper in a wholesale house, which was loth to give him up. After taking the precautions referred to, it took but a short time to arrange the preliminaries and to decide upon a location. He was not an entire stranger to me, as we had had a bowing acquaintance for some time, and I had also met him in a social way. He was one of those exceedingly genial fellows in whose presence one feels good natured and perfectly at ease ; one that readily makes friends. To correct any false impression as to the lack of respect I entertain for those who have departed this life, or that it is my desire to knowingly cast any reflections on such, I wish to emphatically state that my late partner is not dead, but that he is appropriately spoken of as late because of his habitual lack of punctuality. Being desirous of keeping expenses at as low a figure as possible we decided not to employ clerks, but to do the work entirely ourselves. The division of labor naturally adjusted itself, he keeping the books and I doing the buying. We were, of course, both to interest ourselves in selling goods, sweeping the store, cleaning lamps, washing windows, and all such necessary duties as fall to the lot of those who are entirely independent of help. We were fortunate in creating a favorable impression in our new home, and our business proved all that could be expected for beginners. I did not fail to recognize the good qualities of my partner upon closer acquaintance, as they stood out the more clearly against the background of his defects. I may have been somewhat critical, but as his shortcomings affected me directly and personally, I could not be otherwise. He found it convenient to get to business in the morning after I had swept, put out the show goods and cleaned up generally. He was tardy in getting back from dinner and supper ; and many times a day he would run out just for a minute, and return in an hour. I expostulated with him after I became convinced that his actions were premeditated, when he laughingly promised to reform. I felt considerable hesitation in taking him to task, as we had an equal monied interest in the business, and should have been equally interested in other rerpects. He proved to be an excellent salesman, social and obliging, but he never developed any aptitude for putting away goods. In fact, I could always tell what goods he had shown during my absence at meals by the accumulation of stock on the counters. When asked to assist in straightening up, he would betake himself to the books, or to brushing goods, seeming to find much amusement and pleasure in the latter. I should not have been surprised to have found the polish all wiped off the blades of the pocket knives, so industriously did he employ himself in this direction. I always found him ready to lead the procession when any show was to be made, myself coming in for the work ; in fact, I found in the course of time that he had numberless pleasant little ways of making himself disagreeable. Another point which was a constant source of solicitude on my part was the persistent manner in which he gave credit indiscriminately. His genial disposition, upon which I had counted so much, seemed to totally incapacitate him for refusing a request to "just charge this," even when he knew that the party was utterly unworthy of credit. When spoken to about the matter, he acknowledged that this policy would end in numerous bad accounts, but excused himself on the ground that he found it so hard to say no. He proved to be a better servant than master, for though considered an excellent bookkeeper in the position he had held, his posting was never up to date and we were obliged to look over the books whenever a customer called to pay his account. It is said one must travel with a person to know them, but I found that business association answered the same purpose. The climax was reached, during his protracted absence from the store on account of sickness, when it became necessary for me to bring the books up to date. The condition in which I found them, and the manner in which they had been kept, caused me to believe that his design was to keep me in ignorance of the condition of our business. I was strengthened in this belief, because after he had figured up the inventory a short time before, he was unable to find that any money had been made on the year's business. I felt almost confident at the time, from the amount of business we had been doing, that such was not the case ; now I was certain of it. Upon his recovery and return to the store I accused him of deception, and rather than have any further disclosures made he agreed to withdraw from the firm, upon terms dictated by myself. I hardly need add that this ended my experience with partners ; but I often wonder if other people who are apparently serene find their partners more congenial than mine proved to be.—Exchange.

DO YOU LIKE YOUR BUSINESS.

Perhaps a few days prior to beginning the new year spent in considering this question would prove to be very profitable before another twelve months roll around. It might materially change the plans that have been made, or cause the merchant whose lack of interest has made him indifferent, to mature plans that have been allowed to decay for the want of nourishment. The proneness of the retail merchant to get into a rut and stay there is almost excusible when we remember all the petty details that call his attention from one to the other in rapid succession. Not a few are apt to tire of this life, especially when they find that they are at best only making a living for their families and devoting their best years to confining work. In the start it will be well for the retailer to remember that his business is just what he makes it. He is the business and should do the driving. With the dissatisfied merchants it will nearly always be found that the business is in the seat and using the lash very freely.

In the grocery business one thing that militates against it to some extent is the general impression that it does not require any business training and can be picked up by anyone. As this article will doubtless be read by those who have had experience in selling groceries, it is not necessary to explain the fallacy of such an argument. It is also unnecessary to say that the men who think that it requires only indifferent attention are the men who will answer the caption about in the negative. They have found that in addition to the very hard work, there is an endless amount of annoyance that they had not anticipated. Would it not be better then to take a kind of an inventory of ability, talent and tact at the end of the year as well as stock. In summing up the whole with the results of the year's business the grocer may find that he is cheating the country out of a good mechanic, or farmer, or perhaps a statesman or a preacher, by remaining behind the counter. On the other hand, however, he may find that he possesses the necessary qualifications to make money in his present calling. Some men come to the conclusion after having a few years' experience in the grocery business that they have no talent for that line, and their decision prevents them from developing whatever natural tact they may have. Talent is all very well as far as it goes, but it does not bring customers into the store and make them pay a good profit on goods. Talent is wealth, tact is ready money. For all practical purposes of business tact carries it against talent ten to one. Tact causes people to wonder how you can compete with your neighbor and make money.

The secret of success is in being alive to what is going on around one and adopting one's self to his conditions. The man who relies solely on his talent will get left, for he must know that the country is full of talent that hasn't energy enough behind it to make a living. Some of the most successful merchants in the country never had an opportunity to acquire more than a common school education. They were thrown into the business in which they made a success by chance. Their energy made an opening for them and experience added tact. These laid the foundation for talent which followed in due time. The trade is full of men who want to take the second step before they take the first. Small beginnings are too slow and they look for relief in a change of almost any kind. The trouble is that too often they think more of selling out than they think of improving their opportunities. That the number of grocery stores in proportion to the population in most sections is large cannot be denied, but the number does not always make competition. It is not necessary to quit business because you are one of the many. Your name may be Jones and there may be other members of this numerous family in the grocery business, but remember that while there is a number of men keeping grocery stores, the same business also furnishes ample opportunity for distinguishing one's self from the common lot. A story is told of a grocer whose name was Smith. In addition to having to fight against sharp competition in his town he was obliged to compete with two other grocers by the name of Smith. Did he give up and want to sell out? No, he had red hair and he distinguished himself by advertising as "Red-headed Smith the Grocer," and built up a good business under this anomalous trade-mark.—Chicago Grocer.

POINTS FOR CLERKS.

An old writer says that the best education for a youth destined for business pursuits is that which draws out, develops, trains and educates those faculties which distinguish the accomplished man of business.

A good man needs physical vigor and strong nerves, and should be able to read well, speak correctly, write plainly, and count quickly and accurately; therefore a youth should be taught reading, spelling, writing and arithmetic.

A business man needs good sense and a retentive memory; therefore the senses and the memory should be educated.

A business man should have business habits; therefore a youth should be trained to industry, system, punctuality and perseverance.

A business man must be decided in character, yet courteous in manner; a youth should therefore cultivate self-reliance, presence of mind and politeness.

A business man needs sharpness and versatility; there should be nothing in the plan of education which has a tendency to produce excessive prudence.

A business man is all the time concerned with money; therefore a youth should be taught early the use and value of money and practiced in self-denial.—American Grocer.

MONTREAL WHOLESALE GROCER'S ASSOCIATION.

At the annual meeting of The Montreal Wholesale Grocers' Association at the Board of Trade rooms last week, the election of officers resulted as follows:—President, George Childs; vice-president, Charles P. Hebert; treasurer, D. T. Tees. Directors; Chas. Chaput, W. W. Lockerby and J. C. Rose. Committee of Arbitration: Arthur Birks, D. C. Brosseau, Wm. Kinloch, H. Laporte and H. Regan.

DON'T BE TOO FUNNY IN BUSINESS

Of course it was a good joke. Hadn't the boss said that he didn't want everybody in the office running in too see him on every little pretext? Hadn't he told one of the clerks that if the latter wanted anything brought to his attention he should speak to his immediate superior and have the matter come to him through the proper channels?

Naturally, in view of this, everyone was tickled when the assistant bookkeeper said to the bookkeeper:

"Mr. Smith, will you please ask Mr. Brown to ask Mr. Wilkins to ask Mr. Johnson to ask the boss if I can get off Friday at 4 o'clock."

The bookkeeper saw the humor of the thing, and promptly delivered the message to Mr. Brown, and so it went up step by step to the boss, who smiled a sickly sort of smile when the request was repeated to him.

"Ah, yes," he said, "the assistant bookkeeper seems to be a great stickler for office etiquette.

"Yes, sir," returned Mr. Johnson, "he was anxious that the request should reach you through the proper channels."

"Quite right," said the boss. "Now, I might call him in and give him my answer in person, but that would hardly be in conformity with his idea of propriety, would it?"

"Well, sir, I suppose it is only a little joke?"

"Yes, yes, of course. Very amusing this stepladder business. Now, Mr. Johnson, will you please tell Mr. Wilkins to tell Mr. Brown to tell Mr. Smith to tell the assistant bookkeeper that his services are dispensed with. And while you are passing the message down you might add that if we have any more of this stepladder business, I'll kick the whole ladder over and throw it out of the office."—Chicago Tribune.

LET US ARGUE TOGETHER.

Why is the Star Fire Lighter better than Coal Oil?

BECAUSE:
It is less expense than coal oil.
No trouble in preparing kindling.
It is more effective, one square will burn 10 to 15 minutes, and is warranted to light a fire without coal oil or kindling.
It is cleaner, and is perfectly safe.

THE EXTERIOR OF THE STORE.

In order that the retail store shall present a good appearance to the eyes of the passers-by, and thus attract them within, it is necessary that goods and empty barrels and cases should not be allowed to accumulate about the sidewalk. Several of the most successful grocers in New York and Brooklyn have almost as many goods piled up outside their stores as there are inside of those establishments. The effect is not at all pleasing, and people passing along in front of the store experience considerable difficulty in getting by without rubbing flour upon their clothes from a pile of barrels upon one side of the walk, or in escaping violent contact with nails and splinters that project from boxes upon the opposite side. This state of affairs is usually due to want of room inside the store, and my be taken as a sign of prosperity, because it indicates that the business has outgrown its original quarters. From the point of view of the public, however, the contrast between the first-class dry goods store and the first-class grocery establishment that offends the eye in the manner just mentioned, is very disagreeable, and not at all flattering to the grocers. In the former all about the store is attractive. The building itself is usually of ornate style of architecture, and the show windows specious and the contents artistically arranged. No goods occupy the sidewalks, on the contrary, although they are usually as broad as they can possibly be made, nothing interferes with the free passage of the public or with one's view of the show windows. Mark the difference between such stores and at least one city grocery doing an enormous business. In the latter case barrels are piled up to a level with the stone coping of the windows in the story above the store, and the rows of the barrels stretch half the length of the store, which is on a corner. Vegetables protrude in ranks of baskets and boxes six or seven feet out from the line of the building's front, and up each side of the doorway salt sacks mount up into the air for a dozen feet or more. Along the curbstone empty barrels are ranged, besides empty soap and starch boxes. A good display is made in the windows, but it is overshadowed by the piles of goods upon the sidewalks, and, indeed, it is impossible to get near enough to distinguish closely just what the windows contain. The interior of this store is more inviting than the outside, the goods being placed in systematic piles or arranged upon the shelves with an eye to the artistic effect, and once inside, the intending customer is gratified by the scene. But it would be far better to reverse the method and let the interior suffer, provided the outside of the store, which is the first seen by customers, were made to attract instead of repel. When the store space is ample there is no excuse if the dealer litters up his sidewalk with full or empty barrels and boxes, but even want of room is a poor reason for a dealer to continue to use the sidewalk for a store, because, whenever other classes of business men find their original stores too small for their increasing trade, they usually take measures to secure more roomy quarters. It is only the grocer who is unbusiness-like in that respect.—Merchants' Review.

THE MAN BEHIND THE COUNTER.

This individual has it in his power to create or destroy trade, and it is for that reason why every employer should exercise the closest scrutiny as to the character of those they employ, particularly as to the temperment and disposition of employes. A man may be an early riser, attentive to business, industrious and sober, and yet a most undesirable salesman. One of the most important matters to be taken into consideration when employing a salesman, is whether or not he is good natured and obliging. If he lacks these two very essential qualifications, then he lacks the principal ingredients that go to make up a successful salesman. The disobliging, sour-faced, and ill-natured clerk will wreck any business, if he is employed long enough; and all the advertising in the world will not help matters. If there is one thing more than another that irritates and annoys, it is to be waited upon by an ill-natured clerk. One such experience is enough for the average person, when they invariably go elsewhere for supplies. The majority of persons will never say anything or make any complaint, but they transfer their patronage elsewhere just the same. This is usually a very effective remedy, and a satisfactory one. This is forcibly illustrated with the travelling salesman, who will always give a hotel the "go by," if not "boycott" it, and all on account of a surly, impertinent specimen of humanity behind the hotel desk as an excuse for a clerk. It is a safe plan to always avoid the disobliging clerk, to the extent of withdrawing one's patronage from the store where he is employed. Anyone who would knowingly employ or retain in his employ one of those miserable creatures, is not deserving of success.—Ex.

AS TO SALESMANSHIP.

Considering the great importance of commercial travellers, says an exchange, it is a very natural question, "What constitutes a good salesman?" and it is likewise one more easily asked than answered. There are all sorts of formulas for selecting first-class travellers, being guided by their personal appearance, family connections, antecedents and personal address; but the general experience is that a good salesman is born—not made—and that it is a difficult matter to make one out of a man who has not natural fitting qualifications. It seems likewise difficult to define just what these qualifications should be. Men of the most opposite temperaments and diverse gifts are equally successful. It would naturally be thought that a man with good address and knowledge of the business would be a success, but many such are the most disastrous failures. Men that are a success with one house frequently fail with another in just the same territory, and the reverse proposition is quite true; besides, they have to be differentiated to different sections of the country. Southern merchants are not, strictly speaking, suited by such exact business principles as those in the North; in other words, they are more influenced by the individuality of travellers, and when treated right are generally very loyal to one particular man; while on the other hand, the Northern men buy solely wherever they can do so to the best advantage, without taking friendship as a factor in the case. The only thing that can be said with any approach to certainty, is that it seems more a question of character than ability. The salesmen who wear well and have a long run of success are not always the "brainiest" of their tribe, but are sure to be men of good character—are industrious, reliable and sincere, and possess the confidence of their customers.

WHEN, HOW, HOW MUCH TO ADVERTISE.

These three questions confront the house that has something to sell: 1, When to advertise; 2, how to advertise; 3, how much to pay for advertising.

1, A great many of the most successful business men advertise continuously. There is no sentiment about this matter. They wouldn't do it if it didn't pay them. Nevertheless, you may have goods to offer that are seasonable only at certain periods; then advertise them in season. If they are saleable the whole year, then advertise them the whole year. That's "good business."

2. Now, how to advertise, and 3, how much to pay for advertising: The actual cash value of advertising space in any medium is based on two factors, viz.: The Extent and the Quality of that medium's circulation. While circulars may be a valuable adjunct, (there is room for doubt as to this) it must be obvious that for their expense in cash, labor and time, the returns make them a costly and unsatisfactory method of reaching customers. While the periodical is examined (by many beside the one to whom it is addressed) and often kept for reference, a large number of the circulars sent out by any house are never examined at all. Hence let us consider here the periodical alone.

If it be an established fact that the readers of a paper are almost exclusively of that class which constitutes the regular or probable buyers of your grade of goods, then, manifestly, the only question in determining the value of space is that of the extent of circulation. At a glance advertising rates might seem high, or sound high, and yet in reality be very cheap indeed. It is self evident that it is far cheaper, more profitable and less trouble to reach, say 4,000 readers of the right kind, through one medium at 10 cents a line, than the same number through five or six mediums at 5 cents per line.

Among advertisers there is no folly like that of buying space simply because "it dosen't cost much." The best is not too good for the man who pays his money.

A level headed business man advertises for business, not for sentiment or pleasure. If this is not his motive, why advertise at all? And if this is his motive, why not advertise where he will get returns adequate to the cost of his investment?—Exchange.

VOLUME VI., NO. 1.

In the above heading is quoted the distinguishing mark borne by this issue. We have entered upon our sixth year and have no reason to complain of how we find ourselves. Five years ago the point we are now at was a dim and distant one, to all but the eyes of hope, and these everyone knows are too apt to invest the future with a glow that makes the reality a disappointment. It has not been so with us. We were sanguine at the outset that THE GROCER would be a success, and its record has more than borne out our hopes. It is the paper of the trade and the trade gives its sanction to it by its all but unanimous subscription. We begin the new year as we began the last, with the resolution of doing our best to promote the commercial welfare of our readers.

COFFEE SAMPLES ANALYZED FOR $14 PER LB.

The Inland Revenue Department may soon be expected to issue a bulletin upon the quality and composition of the commodity usually sold as coffee in this country. Grocers everywhere need to be on their guard that they do not make themselves liable for the expense of analyzing, etc., samples that turn out to be adulterated An instance of such charges having been imposed has just come under our notice and is worth mentioning. The knowledge of it may make other members of the trade cautious, and will throw some light on the methods followed by some collectors of samples.

W. N. Luke runs a restaurant in connection with his store at 51 and 53 York street, Toronto, and the store is stocked mainly with candies, cigars and fruits. On the 9th of October a man called and asked for a pound of coffee. Mr. Luke keeps coffee, but not so much to sell it as to consume it in his restaurant. The man was waited on by an employe, Mr. Luke not being at home. The only coffee in stock was in tin packages, put up by a house in this city, and on every package the label bore the term "compound." From one of these packages, placed on the counter, the customer was served. He paid for his purchase, took out a quarter of a pound from it which he enclosed in an envelope-package, sealed it with the seal of the Inland Revenue, wrote a few particulars upon a blank form it bore and handed it back to the attendant, mentioning at the same time that he was Mr. Watson of the Inland Revenue Department and that this package was to be kept till some word was heard from him or the Department. That was the last of the matter till the 18th of the present month, when Mr. Luke received, through the Collector here, a letter from Mr. Miall, Commissioner of Inland Revenue at Ottawa, stating that the sample taken on the 9th of October was found to contain chicory and farinaceous matter, and notifying Mr. Luke that within ten days he must pay the local Collector $14 for the expense of procuring and analyzing this coffee.

This letter naturally rather astonished Mr. Luke. All the coffee he sells over the counter in a year would not amount to $14. Why should he be picked on to contribute $14 for the public enlightenment as to the constituents of so-called coffee? But why was an example made at all? The manufacturers admitted in their labels that the coffee was not pure. Then do the eyes of the public need opening? The public were warned by the label, which protects maker and seller alike. What these inspectors are supposed to forward are samples of what is branded and sold as Coffee, not Coffee Compound Mr. Luke has not forwarded the $14 charged, having sent in his protest.

The trade everywhere need to be very cautious. Anything with the epithet 'compound' marked upon it should never be named to any customer or inquirer without the addition of that distinguishing term, for the order may come from a detective. If your goods are marked simply coffee, ginger, etc., and you know where you got them, you can sell them as coffee, ginger, etc., as if you are mulcted for a breach of the second sub-division of section 11 of the Adulteration Act, you have some one else to put in for defrauding you. But, when a man asks for coffee, and you have what is marked coffee-compound, call it the latter. You can truly enough say that there is very little pure coffee sold.

FROST ON WINDOWS.

"A Subscriber" writes to ask how show windows should be ventilated to keep them from frosting. The window is not a separate compartment, as there is no partition, glazed or otherwise, between it and the remaining portion of the store. It is simply a recess. The lack of a back window makes it difficult if not impossible to keep the glass clear of frost deposits. In the air of the room, kept heated all day by the furnace, there is and indeed ought to be some moisture. The outer air keeps the window glass cool, and from the internal air coming in contact with this the moisture is distilled and frozen. There seems to be nothing to prevent it if the window is not backed by a partition which keeps the warmth pretty much outside of the space within the window. If there is this back-partition the front window can be kept clean by apertures for a circulation within it, holes being bored for this purpose in the top and bottom bars of the sash. If any of our readers know of a method for keeping single window fronts clear of frost, they will oblige us by describing it.

Mr. J. W. It does not always express itself that way, but there is a great deal of esteem for Mr. Borsbery lying informally scattered through the grocery and general stores of the country.

A serious accident occurred the other day to W. H. Carruthers, Postmaster of Wodehouse, Ont. Messrs. Wiley and Woods met in Carruthers' store in the morning, the former having a Winchester rifle, and upon some remarks being made respecting the gun, Mr. Woods asked to examine it. Before handing the gun to Mr. Woods, Mr. Wiley took out a cartridge, believing it to be the last one in the gun, but unfortunately there was another one in it, for soon after Mr. Woods began to examine it, off the rifle went, the ball entering Mr. Carruthers' leg just below the knee, penetrating the leg, coming out at the opposite side and lodged in the floor.

It was in Holmes' store, Newry, Ont., the other night, that a party offered to buy as much stuff as a certain young local glutton could eat. The challenge was accepted, and the young man straightway proceeded to mow away the following bill of fare :—Three plates of oysters, 2 cans of salmon, 10 dry soda biscuits, in seven minutes ; sucked six eggs, and finished up on a pound of figs. This was devoured after eating his supper a few minutes previous.

At half-past six on Christmas evening burglars broke in through the windows of Messrs. Hislop, Meldrum & Co.'s store, commission merchants and dairy produce dealers, Commissioners street Montreal, and stole a case of poultry, which they carried out at the front door and placed in a waggon. Soon afterwards the police discovered what had occurred, and a hunt was made for the thieves. A man named John Keenan was was caught by constables Heezele and Cote with twenty chickens and a turkey in his possession, which he could not satisfactorily account for. The result was that he was taken to No. 5 police station on suspicion of being concerned in the burglary.

According to the new Banking Act the Government will, on Jan. 1, possess itself of all unclaimed sums that have been lying in any of the chartered banks for five years It therefore behooves all parties who have funds in any of the banks, and have not made any claim thereon, or had any transaction therewith, for five years, to call at the banks and make good their claims. There are a great many persons in this situation, some of them parents who, on the birth of a child, have laid by a small sum to gather interest for ten or twenty years, and who never imagine that it is in any danger of disappearing.

On the 1st inst., a deputation representing the Dominion Commercial Travellers' association, sister societies from the West, and the Montreal Board of Trade, waited upon the Canadian Pacific and Grand Trunk Railway companies to ask certain concessions. They desired that commercial travellers should be allowed to carry 500 lbs. of baggage, instead of 300 lbs., without paying excess rate ; that fares should only be two cents per mile instead of two and a quarter cents ; that the return tickets issued on Saturday at one fare for the double journey, and available for return up to Monday should be issued on Friday. The railway companies promised to consider the requests, and on Monday, Mr. Wadsworth, secretary of the Dominion Commercial Travellers' Association, received a communication to the effect that the only concession which would be granted was that in reference to the Saturday return tickets. They would in future be issued on Friday, but their sale would be limited to the stations at Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and London, and to the places of business or residence of the traveller, which latter must be shown by an endorsation or otherwise on his traveller's certificate.

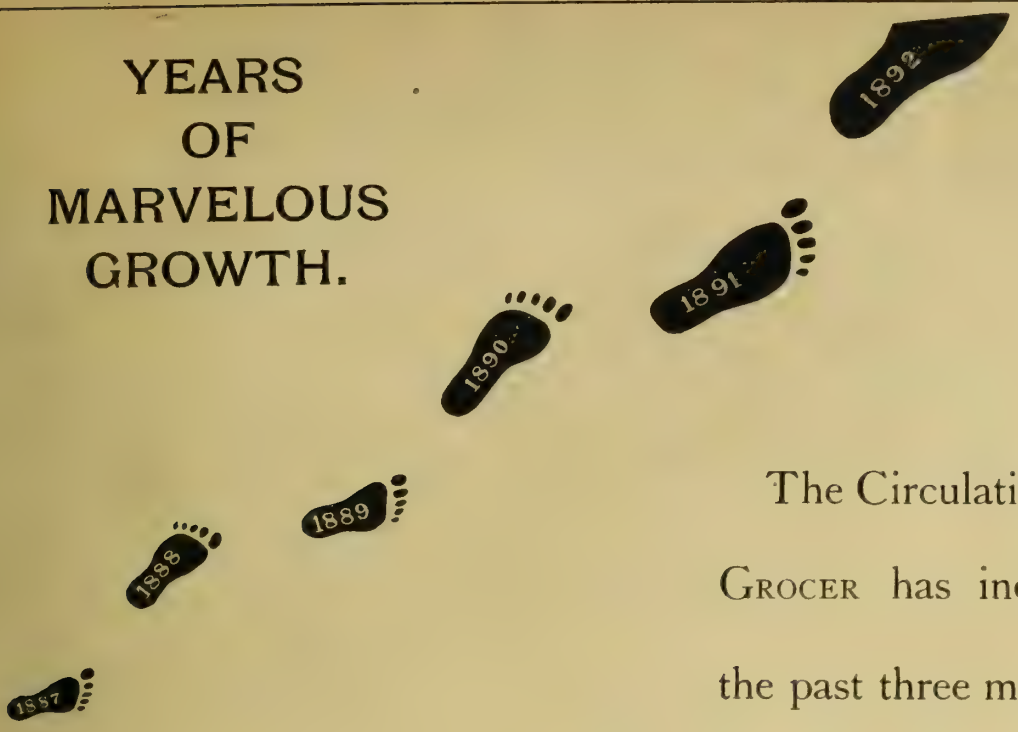
YEARS OF MARVELOUS GROWTH.



The Circulation of THE CANADIAN GROCER has increased one third in the past three months and it has now more than double the circulation among Grocers and General Merchants than that of any other journal in the Dominion. Advertisers make a note of this.

We have been steadily on the march after subscribers for the past five years and our footprints may be traced through every village, town and city from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Thousands of dollars have been spent yearly in the work. We now have our reward in seeing THE CANADIAN GROCER the leading trade journal in Canada.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Dec. 31, 1891.

GROCERIES.

The holiday week is a blank link between the market of the old year and that of the new. It is always an off-week so far as trade is concerned, and there is nothing exceptional about the present instance of it. The Christmas trade done at retail counters did not run stocks down to such a point that any considerable ordering had to be done to be able to meet the New Year's Day demand. Still an occasional small order does come in by mail or wire for nuts, dried fruits, peels, etc. They cannot well come otherwise as the travellers are all in. Stock-taking is now the work that both wholesalers and retailers are busied with. It is not expected to be an unusually heavy piece of work this year, as buying has been late as a rule. The jobbers carry no heavy stocks of anything, unless it be tea, and the retailers as a rule can go on but a short time upon present supplies. Their stock-taking is expected to reveal a considerable volume of more or less immediately pressing wants which shall tell beneficially on trade during January and February. But payments are backward, over-due accounts and renewals are a more noticeable feature of the closing this year than they were a year ago. Some members of the wholesale trade are disposed to regard this as an unfavorable omen for the winter trade, which so far has had little stimulus from seasonable weather or marketing of grain. The street is quiet, the brokers have withdrawn from it for a season, and little is to be heard but the voice of the inventory-checker calling off the items for entry.

CANNED GOODS.

The business done just now in canned goods is nominal. Sales are not likely to be heard of until the New Year is well opened. But the market is in a healthy condition. We are turning the year with comparatively light stocks, the fall trade having honeycombed stocks very considerably and more than ever before. Heretofore the ante-Christmas demand was not entirely dependent upon the new pack, as a residuum was usually carried over from the former year's pack, but the sole vegetable supply this fall was new stock, and the season's consumption has been uncommonly large. Prices are steady at $1.05 to $1.10 for tomatoes and peas, $1.05 for corn, and $1.05 to $1.10 for assorted lots made up of equal portions of peas, corn and tomatoes. In salmon and lobsters the market is at a temporary standstill, with the volume of stock moderate.

COFFEES.

While coffee is neglected locally, the outside market continues in the course of its development. Uncertainty as to the position appears to prevail in New York as to Rios. It is expected that a strong European demand will begin to tell improvingly upon the situation shortly, though without that influence the market must rule dull and prices low. Stocks here are fairly large, but high grades are scarce.

DRIED FRUIT.

A few orders for fancy stock have been filled and the prices of Malaga have hardened in the quotations of most houses, though there are some yet quoting at values marked in Prices Current. The tendency of Valencia raisins is unchanged and prices remain as low as 5¼c. In New York and London the market is weak and evidently glutted. Offers from both markets are liberal and bids are invited. The stock in the country is lighter on this account, neither jobbers nor retailers stocking freely in anticipation of easier values before the winter is well on. Currants are steady and unchanged at 5¾c. upwards.

NUTS.

A few parcels of Grenoble walnuts have gone out since Christmas, as a considerable supply came to jobbers' hands at the last moment before that holiday. All prices are unchanged and stocks are reasonably full.

RICE AND SPICES.

A featureless, inactive market rules for rice. Prices are unchanged. In spices there is also a nominal trade, with no present indications of change.

SUGAR.

The sales of the past month have been light, but prices appear to stand the dulness very well. There is some expectation that easier quotations will supervene. Against the chances in favor of this possibility must be placed the fact that the new crop of beet sugar is likely to be short, another recent bulletin from M. Licht reducing his estimate by 100,000 tons more. In New York refiners are still coquetting with importers of raw, but if the consumptive demand should become lively the former would have to go up to the ideas of the raw sugar men. The fundamental position of the sugar market appears everywhere to be strong, temporary and local dulness being the only factors on the side of weakness. Prices are unchanged at 4⅞ to 5c. for granulated, and from 3½c. upwards for yellows.

Willet & Gray's statistical report says: Nothing occurred during the week to change the dull and stagnant state of the raw sugar market, and, with the exception that refiners show a little more interest at the decline in the last day or two, there is nothing to remark about the past week. A very significant fact affecting the future of sugar, however, was received late yesterday in cable messages from Mr. E. O. Licht, of Magdebourg, the recognized authority on beet sugar, to the effect that he has found it necessary to reduce his estimates of the beet crop another 100,000 tons, making total crop of Europe 3,530,000 tons, against 3,670,782 tons last year, a deficiency of 140,782 tons. It is quite possible that he may be obliged to make a still further reduction. The size of the cane sugar crop is now a matter of great importance, but it is too early yet for close estimates. The latest news points to an excess over the last crop, although the crop of beet and cane together are smaller than last year. As soon as the domestic crop of the United States has gone largely into consumption, the United States must be larger buyers of raw sugars abroad than they have been in 1891, and it can be only a question of a short time when sugar will rule at higher prices all over the world. Europe will very likely take the lead in the advance, but the United States must follow. The situation may become quite serious should the president issue a proclamation cutting off some of the sources of supply for the United States markets.

The demand for refined sugars has been only moderate, as the country buys on a hand-to-mouth basis, as is usual at the close of the year, and are carrying very little stock into the new year, which will probably prove a mistake from a speculative point of view. The extremely low prices now current for refined, as compared with raws and the prospects for raws, can scarcely be accounted for. Refiners have had a good business during the year, and perhaps care more for the influence of low prices for refined upon the raw sugar markets at the beginning of the cane sugar crops than for a profit on their limited December business. We repeat what we have already written this month, that it is advisable to take advantage of the concessions of refiners, and also to carry a good line of refined sugars during 1892. We will not be surprised at a very considerable advance in prices, and it may begin at any time. The Spreckels refinery in Philadelphia is said to have put in two new vacuum pans for manufacture of a full line of soft refined, and the refinery has resumed with this week. The Brooklyn house will be closed to-day until January 2, and the Havemeyers & Elder and other New York houses until Monday, the 28th inst. The salesroom of the American Sugar Refining Company will, however, be open for business on Saturday.

Stocks in all countries 53,793 tons over last year. Cane crops estimated 72,149 tons over last year. Beet crops 140,782 tons under last year. European markets rising. Refiners, under competition, selling granulated at 3.92c. net cash, made mainly from raw sugar costing 3⅛c. net cash. Domestic crop of the United States now being marketed 40,000 tons less than last year's. Consumption of United States increased 24½ per cent. in 1891. From the above, an advance in refined sugar seems quite imminent, and is only delayed by the competition of refiners.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The supply of syrups has plainly outrun the demand. The prices quoted at the refineries are exceptionally low. Some United States makers have been pushing sales here. Canadian syrups range from 2¼c. up.

In molasses, as in everything else at the moment, business is at a standstill. New Orleans quotes at 30 to 50c. per gallon, and West Indies from 35c. up in barrels.

TEAS.

As buying has been somewhat reserved for some time and stocks have been accumulating in wholesale hands, both sides of the market are believed to be in condition to do an active business when the new year trade begins. The prices quoted range as low as 14c. for Japans, 15c. for Congous and 16c. for Young Hysons. The present appears to be a very good time to buy tea. Business in Indian teas has been very quiet during the past week, but the home market is firmer especially for fine teas, all desirable lines maintaining their position. Private advices say a much improved market is expected after the holiday, and Pekoe Souchongs and such like which are now selling at very low prices, will not be procurable any more at previous figures.

PETROLEUM.

There have been no changes in the market. A quiet business is reported at standing prices.

The Petrolia Advertiser says: Petrolia crude is $1.30 per bbl.; Oil Springs crude $1.30 per bbl. The fight between the Premier Oil Co. and the Imperial still goes bravely on. Prices are a mystery, but one thing we must say that both companies are manufacturing a most magnificent oil. We are informed that refined is worth about 11½c., and perhaps less where occasion calls for a cut. For quite a while there has been a depression in the lubricating oil trade here. The selling of a low class of goods, has been a disturbing element in the market. Oils improperly made from tail-ends, and which should have been dumped into the creek, were offered at prices to get contracts. Those corporations who are always on the hunt for "bargains" are in our opinion sadly taken in. Cheapness is no longer a recommendation, when the wear and tear of machinery is taken into consideration, and the lessons of the past few years should cause buyers to look after their interests more closely. Dark steam refined is most popular from the fact that the miserable apology formerly sold under that name by some refiners could find no market, and the better product of well-known brands commands a ready sale at higher prices. Improved process for manufacture have worked a revolution in the lubricating oil line, and the increasing demand is the assurance that these particular oils are highly appreciated.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There is no lack of butter for immediate purposes, as a strong supply streamed into the market on the eve of Christmas. The stock ran more into large rolls which quotes at 14 to 16c. There was a declining income of tubs at 15 to 18c., the upper price being for strictly choice. Except in a local way the market is inactive. The present large supply is not expected to last long, once the dull spell is passed.

Cheese is steady at 10½ to 11c. The market presents no new feature this week.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES—A quiet spell succeeds rather an active one for Christmas trade. The prices run from $1.50 to $2.75.

BEANS—Are easier at $1.20 to $1.30 in round lots, and $1.30 to $1.40 jobbed out.

CRANBERRIES—A considerable run on stocks has taken place at $7.50 to $8 per barrel.

DRIED APPLES—The interest now felt in the market is based on no expectations of further very large orders as the lumber camps are pretty well supplied. The price is 4 to 4¾c. according to quantity.

EVAPORATED APPLES—The market is quiet, the operations of the Montreal house referred to last week being followed by rather a tranquil spell. The price runs from 6½ to 8c., according to size of lot.

EGGS—The trade keeps at a fairly active rate, 18c. being paid for strictly fresh and 14 to 15c. for limed, the latter of which are abundant.

GAME — Partridges are steady at 45 to 50c., and rabbits are quiet at 15 to 25c.

HIDES—The dulness is unbroken, in fact is rather deepened. Green quote at 4½c. for No. 1 cows', while cured are hard to sell at 5c.

HONEY—A small business is reported at prices that have held for a long time, that is, 8 to 10c. for extracted and 14 to 16c. for sections.

HOPS—The position is unchanged. Prices are steady at 18 to 22c., and buyers are not coming forward freely.

MARKETS—Continued

ONIONS—Are dull and unchanged at $2.25 to $2.50.

POULTRY—The price has been a variable one for turkeys, ranging from 8½ to 11c., geese are 6 to 7c., chickens 25 to 40c., ducks 50 to 75c.

POTATOES—Not much interest is evinced by buyers. The price ranges from 40 to 43c. for cars, and 50 to 55c. for out of store lots.

SEEDS—The weather is still adverse to heavy or even average receipts. The market is practically unchanged, $5.50 to $6 holding for alsike, and $5 to $5.25 for red clover.

SKINS—The price continues to be 95c. to $1 for sheepskins and 5 to 7c. for calfskins, with little doing just now.

TALLOW—Is plentiful at 5½ to 5¾c. for refined and 2c. for rough.

WOOL—No receipts are reported. The price is 19c. and weak.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

Offers are free at $5.40 for choice western selected, but packers manifest little interest, being quite loaded up for a few days, their purchases last week carrying them fairly over this one. A few lots of both rail and street delivery have been bought as low as $5.25, but they were for the most part northern hogs and of variable descriptions.

BACON.—Nothing is doing. Long clear quotes at 7¾c., backs at 10c., bellies 10½c., and rolls 8¾c.

HAMS—Are quiet at 10½ to 11c

LARD.—Pure is steady at 9½ to 9¾c.

BARREL PORK.—Mess is $13.75, and short cut is $15.50 to $16.

FRESH MEATS.—Overbuying for Christmas leaves the market well stocked without the necessity of laying in supplies now. Beef is 4½ to 5c. for fore-quarters and 6 to 9c. for hind quarters. Mutton is 6 to 7c., and lamb 7 to 9c.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

The week's business has not been important. Though the demand is languid and the weather unreliable there is little apprehension as to the prospects of the winter's trade, as stocks are light. Heretofore this market has frequently been deranged at Christmas by the dumping of a lot of herrings, smelts, etc., which often had to be carted away as waste. This year the trouble with Newfoundland has caused great difficulty in getting stock, and now herring is a scarce article. There appears to be no excess in any line. Prices are unchanged.

SALT.

A very easy outward movement at steady prices is all the activity the market exhibited this week. During the holiday period the demand for salt, as for all lines, shrinks to small proportions.

GREEN FRUIT.

Stocks of green fruit do not melt away fast under the action of so light a demand as has been experienced this week. Prices are steady. In oranges, Valencias are $5.25 to $5.50, Floridas $2.75 to $3.25, Jamaicas $5.50 to $6. Lemons quote at $3.50 to $4 for Malagas in boxes and $7.50 to $8 in half-chests, $4.50 to $5 for Messinas. Bananas are $2 to $2.75 per bunch. Pineapples are $3 per dozen.

DRY GOODS.

The present week can affect the situation but little except in the respect that it makes it seven days older and nearer to the time when activity is expected. There is not much doing. Unseasonable weather and delayed grain deliveries are negative forces, whose effect is seen in the shrunken volume of business and the backwardness of payments.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Dec. 31, 1891.

The markets throughout the week with the exception of those which are particularilly effected have shown the usual holiday dullness; consequently there are few features to note of importance. Leading lines of groceries such as sugars, teas, etc., have been dull and nominal the only activity to note being in seasonable lines of green fruit oranges and grapes, and in poultry and such lines of provisions as are in demand for immediate wants. These furnished some business but the damp unseasonable weather had a depressing effect on poultry which however is improving with the cold spell which set in last Sunday.

SUGAR, ETC.

The movement of refined sugar during the week was only moderate, for refiners are not pressing sales, and grocers are only buying for immediate requirements. Prices are unchanged, 4½c. for granulated, and 3½ to 4⅜c for yellows.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

There is only a fair trade doing in syrups at unchanged prices, and molasses is only selling in small lots, the bad country roads restricting business. We quote Montreal syrups 28 to 30c; American 25c.; Barbados molasses 36c., and New Orleans 28 to 30c.

TEAS.

The tea market has not furnished any important business since our last report, for business is practicaily suspended until after the holidays. A few Japans have changed hands at 15½ to 21c., and some low grade blacks have been called for.

COFFEES.

The firm tone of coffee is maintained, but business has been small during the week. Rio stock continues strong at 19 to 20c., and Jamaica and Maracaibo have ruled at the same basis.

RICE.

Rice is practically without feature locally, and we quote prices nominally unchanged: Patna, $4.50 to $5; Japan, $4.75 to $5; standard, $3.90, and off grades, $3.50 in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

The demand necessitated by the holidays was supplied a fortnight ago, and since then business has been rather quiet with nothing important to note. Currants continue firm and scarce at 5½ to 6c., and raisins are steady at 5 to 5¼c. for firsts.

GREEN FRUIT.

There has been considerable activity in seasonable lines of dried fruit, and oranges and grapes have benefited on this account. Florida oranges are firmer in consequence from jobbers, and business is now doing at $3 per box as the best figure. Almeria grapes have also encountered good enquiry at $5 to $5.50 per barrel.

NUTS.

Of course there was the usual call for nuts on holiday account, but no change is noted. Almonds move 13½ to 14c. for Terragona,

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO, DEC. 31 1891.

Nothing to disturb the rather featureless market that existed last week has occurred since. The output has been continuous but at a normal rate, nothing of the special activity in breadstuffs that frequently characterizes the closing of the year coming in for record. Prices have remained for the most part the same, though an undertone of weakness is observable in the transactions that have taken place. Not much inquiry for business is reported at the moment from the east.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $5.25; strong bakers', $4.85; Ontario patents, $5; straight roller, $4.75; extra, $4.10 to $4.15: low grades, per bag, $1 25 to $1.75.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.30 to $5.50; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.90 to $5.10; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90; straight roller, $4.15 to $4.20; extra, $4.00 to $4.05; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL.—Little impulse has been given to business by the demand this week, as buying for present consumption has been considerable before holidays. Cornmeal is $3.90 to $4 for gold dust and similar grades. In carloads the price is $3.50 to $3.60. Grits are $4, hominy $4 and oatmeal $4 to $4.25, the price of the last easing materially since a week ago.

FEED.—Bran is slightly easier but still scarce at $17. Shorts are unchanged at $18 to $19. Mixed feed is $25. Cracked corn $1.35 per cwt., corn 70 to 71c. per bushel, oats 33½ to 35c., feeding barley 48 to 49c.

HAY—Timothy is a shade lower, carloads quoting at $12. Mixed is $10.

STRAW.—is steady at $6 to $6.50 for oat.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR—The flour market continues dull, with no change to note in prices. The stocks in store shows an increase of 4,868 barrels compared with a week ago, and a decilne of 1,285 bbls. compared with a year ago. Patent spring, $5 to $5.35; Patent winter, $5 to $5.25; straight roller, $4.65 to $4.80; Extra $4.30 to $4.40; Superfine $4.00 to $4.10; City strong bakers' $5.00 to $5.10; Strong bakers' $4.75 to 5.00.

OATMEAL—The oatmeal market is dull but holds firm. Standard, per bag, $2 20 to $2.30; granulated, $2.20 to $2.30; rolled, $2.20 to $2.30.

FEED—Is quiet and firm. Bran and shorts are scarce, with prices strong at $17 to $19, and $19 to $20 respectively, while mouillie is quiet and unchanged at $25.

and Grenoble walnuts 14½ to 15c. Filberts, peccans, etc., are the same.

CANNED GOODS.

Jobbers report the movement in all lines of canned goods small. Grocers have a good stock on hand, and no improvement is expected for a few weeks at least. In the absence of business, prices are nominal.

APPLES.

Apples have shown no change since a week ago, and prices rule firm at $2.10 to $2.25 in car lots and $2.50 to $3 in jobbing quantities. Evaporated apples furnish nothing particular locally, and dried stock are without feature, with no change in values.

FISH.

The fish market is featureless at the moment, and prices are nominally unchanged. Stocks of all staple lines, however, are limited, and holders have no anxiety as to the future, confidently awaiting the Easter demand.

PROVISIONS.

The movement in provisions is unimportant, for there is practically little or no demand at the moment. Canadian short cut, per brl. $15.75 to $16.00; mess pork, western, per brl. $13.50 to $14.00; short cut, western, per brl. $16.25 to $16.50; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c; bacon, per lb. 9c. to 10c; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¾ to 8c.

CHEESE.

Holders are nursing their stocks at the moment until the turn of the year and it is a purely nominal market at 11c in the absence of important business. No anxiety is manifested about the future however. We quote: Finest fall made Western 11 to 11⅛c.; finest fall made Townships 10⅞ to 11c.; Medium descriptions 10½ to 10⅝c.; Cable 55s.

BUTTER.

It is a firm quiet butter market with only a shady jobbing business doing. The demand is only for local wants but prices are maintained all round. We quote: Late made creamery 24c.; Finest Townships, 20 to 20½c.; Finest Western, 16½ to 17½c.

EGGS.

The demand for eggs is fair, and prices are unchanged at 15 to 16c. for limed stock, which is practically the only kind offering.

POULTRY.

Of course there was an active market for poultry, but a week of confirmed rainfall upset calculations materially. Turkeys early in the week were stiff at 11c., but fresh receipts and the damp muggy weather frightened buyers, and they dropped off until 9½ to 10c. was the ruling, and we know of several round shipments which were cleared out at the inside figure. In fact some holders who are pretty well loaded up, are praying earnestly that the cold weather which set in last Sunday will be continuous. Chickens, geese, etc., fared the same way as turkeys. At present we quote prices as follows: Turkeys 10c. to 11c., geese 4 to 6c.; chickens at 7 to 8c.; ducks 7 to 8c.

GRAIN.

The grain market was dull and without feature throughout the week. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago show an increase of 14,624 wheat, 1,667 oats, 3,339 rye, and a decrease of 117,089 peas, 14,293 barley. Compared with a year ago there is an increase of 87,655 wheat, 37,016 peas, 174,315 barley, and a decrease of 4,235 corn, 71,363 oats. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04; peas, 75 to 76c. per 66 pounds; oats, 35c. to 36c. per 34 pounds in store, corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 48 to 50c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Dec. 30, 1891.

Christmas has come and gone, and the trade which grocers were expecting has proved to some disappointing, to others quite up to their expectations, though we think on the whole the volume of business done was equal to other years. The roads are in a wretched condition and prevented a large number of farmers getting their produce to market. The meats and poultry were very fine and prices satisfactory.

FLOUR.—The market shows signs of weakness. There is only a limited quantity moving, and that in a jobbing way. Prices are about the same as last quoted.

MEAL—Is some easier the advance noticed last week was only temporary, and is selling at $3.10 to $3.15.

SUGARS are unchanged, and sales made are in small lots.

SYRUPS—No change to quote.

MOLASSES—Very little moving with prices same as last quoted.

BUTTER—The market is well supplied prices are low.

EGGS—In cases are selling at 19 to 22c choice henery 24 to 26c.

FISH—Dry cod medium $4.35 to 4.50; large cod $4.90 to 5.25; pollock $2.30 to 2.50; herring pickeled eastern ½ bls. $3.25 to 3.40, bay ½ bls. $1.80 to 2.

THE MANUFACTURE OF LEMON ESSENCES IN SICILY.

According to a report from the United States Consul at Messina the following is a condensed account of the Sicilian method of manufacturing lemon essences. With three strokes of a sharp knife the cutter peels the lemon lengthwise, and lets the peel fall into a tub under the chopping block. He then cuts the lemon in two and throws it from his knife into a bucket. He works with wonderful rapidity, and fills from ten to twelve tubs with peel a day, and is paid 2½d. a tub, weighing 77 lbs. His left hand and right index finger are protected with bands of osnaburgs or leather. The fresh peel is soaked in water fifteen minutes before the essence is extracted. Peel that has stood for a day or two remains soaking from thirty to forty minutes, that it may swell and offer a greater resistanee to the sponge. The workman holds a small sponge in his left hand, against which he presses each piece of peel two or three times—simple pressure, followed by rotary pressure. The women employed in this work run a piece of cane through their sponges to enable them to hold them more firmly. The outside of the peel is pressed against the sponge, as the oil glands are in the epicarp. The crushing of the oil cells liberates the essence therein contained. The sponge, when saturated with the essence, is squeezed into an earthen vessel held in the lap. The peel is so thoroughly pressed that not a single cell escapes. This is ascertained by holding the pressed peel to the flame of a candle; should it neither crackle nor diminish the brilliancy of the flame the cells are empty. The process yields, besides the essence, a small quantity of juice and feccia (dregs). The seperation of the essence, juice and feccia soon takes place if the vessels are not disturbed; the oil floats on the juice and the dregs fall into the bottom. These three products derived from the peel have no affinity with each other. As the essence rises to the surface it is skimmed off, bottled, and left to settle for a few days. It is then drawn off with a glass syphon into copper cans, which are hermetically sealed. After the essence has been expressed a small quantity of juice is pressed from the peels, which are then given to oxen or goats, or thrown on the manure heap and well rotted, or they would make too heating a fertiliser. The yield of essence is variable. The industry is carried on five months in the year. Immature fruit contains the most oil. From November to April in the province of Messina 1,000 lemons yield about fourteen ounces of essence and 17 gallons of juice. The essence is so valuable that the workman are closely watched, for they are most ingenious in secreting it about their persons. Six men can work up 8,000 lemons a day; two cut off the peel, while four extract the much valued essence.

INSOLVENCY JURISDICTION.

In discussing legislation affecting matters in insolvency, we have advanced the opinion that such legislation was the exclusive prerogative of the Parliament of the Dominion of Canada, and that the provincial legislatures were exceeding their jurisdiction in dealing with it. If we refer to the question once again, it is to draw attention to the opinions of the judges of the Supreme Court expressed in regard to the subject in an appeal which came before them on Saturday last. The case of Gibbons vs MacDonald, which was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeals at Toronto, was under argument and raised a question of insolvency under the Ontario Act. One of the points at issue involved the meaning to be attached to the word "pressure." Mr. Justice Gwynne remarked that such cases should not come before the Supreme Court, but that an Insolvency Act should be passed by the Dominion Parliament. Later on, Mr. Justice Strong raised the constitutional question and intimated that the point at issue involved the constitutionality of the Ontario Insolvent Act, expressing it as his opinion that it would be better not to proceed any further until both Sir John Thompson and Mr. Mowat were notified of what was being done. Counsel for the parties objected that such a course would be most unfair to the parties in the case, as it would involve the laying over of the whole matter until next term. The judges took counsel together, and then the Chief Justice, Sir William Ritchie, announced that as the case before them did not come under the Ontario Act as amended at the last session of the legislature, the Court would proceed with the hearing so far as could be done without touching upon the constitutional point, but that in any future case under the amended Act which should be brought before the Supreme Court, the Attorney-General of the Dominion and of Ontario would have to be made parties to the cause, in order that the question of the jurisdiction of the province to legislate upon insolvency matters might be set at rest. We have in the foregoing an expression of doubt on the part of the judges of the Supreme Court as to the constitutionality of insolvency legislation by the provinces, and we trust that this suggestion will have the effect of leading to action on the part of the Dominion Government. It is difficult to understand the unwillingness of the law officers of the Dominion to deal with a question involving such important interests as those arising out of the question of insolvency. The British North America Act, which is Canada's written constitution, gives exclusive jurisdiction in matters of insolvency and bankruptcy to the Parliament of the Dominion. That Parliament has already recognised its rights by passing an act respecting insolvent banks, insurance companies, loan companies, building societies and trading corporations, known as "The Winding-Up Act." What it has done for these corporations it has the power to do for firms and individuals. The constitutionality of the Winding-Up Act has never been questioned, and is not likely to be; but even if it were, the objections would not be maintained. Under these circumstances we trust that the next session of Parliament will have the credit of enacting a measure which will have the effect of doing away with the incongruities, contrarieties and imperfections which are so glaring in the provincial enactments on the subject.—The Shareholder.

IS IT WELL TO ADVERTISE PRICES ?

Does it pay to advertise prices? Always, no; frequently, yes.

There are reasons a-plenty why prices ought not to be advertised.

In the case where one is selling a better article than his competitors, and is obliged to charge a little more for it, there would be no gain in calling attention to prices at all. You must emphasize quality, and sink the matter of cost out of sight.

Take an almost exactly opposite case where you find yourself with goods on hand upon which, thanks to some fortunate circumstance, you are able to undersell the market. You may take the view, as some do, that you do not wish to directly challenge the trade. You want your customers to know about your bargains, but hesitate about telling your competitors. Hence you do not commit the news to print. You advertise that you are selling very cheap, but do not give the figures that would tell how cheap. That is not the way the largest and shrewdest houses would look at it, but is a view that more or less prevails.

Or suppose you are doing a business that is partly cash and partly credit. Here the same set of prices will not fit both conditions. Either they will be so high as to drive the cash customers away, or so low that you cannot afford to give the credit that many of your customers expect.

This side of the case can be supported by other hypothetical citations—all from the point of view of the dealer.

As for the buyer, it can be set down as an axiom that a would-be purchaser always wants to know the price. If the thing advertised appeals to his tastes or necessities at all, the matter of prices comes next. "How much is it?" is the invariable question

Thus the point of view of the buyer seems diametrically opposed to that of the seller.

But in the larger sence it is not opposed at all. For it should be the seller's study to learn what the buyer wants and what pleases him. Their interests ought to be identical, and they are in all fair dealing.

A person likes to know whether such and such a thing he sees advertised comes reasonably within his scope. Left in doubt just then, when he is interested, he may never take the trouble to find out. His attention, arrested for a moment, leads him to contemplate a purchase, though not in a very definite way. He cannot reach a definite conclusion while the price remains an unknown quantity.

Unless he wants the goods very much, the average man is pretty likely to let the matter drop. True, he might write to inquire or ask in person, but that involves exertion. And then, not every one likes to bother a tradesman or his clerks with inquiries that perhaps seem aimless and may lead to nothing.

London shopkeepers, who are admitted to be the best in the world, almost invariably tag their goods. A shop window there is a true index to the business inside. If you see anything you want you have only to step in and lay down your shillings. Newspaper advertising in England is based upon that idea, I think, to a far greater extent than it is with us. The price is given.

Coods of considerable value are often brought to the attention of business men by means of newspapers and circulars, with everything stated but the price. This is particularly true of costly machinery. Such and such a machine may seem exactly suited to the requirements of the merchant or manufacturer who has studied a description of it. It is worth thinking about for purchase, three months, six months hence. Cost must first be counted, contingencies considered, everything planned ahead. But first—what is the price? Let him ask for it, and for answer down swoops the voluble drummer, eager to close a trade before the going down of the sun.

This was not what he wanted at all. It is not even what the machine builder wanted if he studied his own interests. It is too premature, too bothersome.

So then, with all objections weighed and all exceptions granted, I am confident that a more general advertising of prices would please the people and sell goods. While not in all cases feasible or important, a more general adoption of the idea would seem to be demanded.—N. A. Lindsey, in Printers' Ink.

THE RETAIL GROCER

No more potent factor in the distribution of food products exists than the retail grocer. His influence is greater and the results more direct and lasting than the efforts of the manufacturer and jobber combined. It is the retailer who deals with and comes directly in contact with the consumer. And it is for this reason that so much is expected of him in the way of selling nice goods of a fine quality. The retailer often says, when approached on the subject of handling fine goods, that he has not the time to expatiate on the merits of certain brands of goods. He expects the manufacturer to create the demand, which is clearly the duty of the manufacturer, instead of making an effort in that direction himself. The manufacturer can not do it all, and it is wrong for the retailer to think so. There is no retail grocer of any standing whatever but has some select trade—customers who want the best. This class are willing to pay more for a better article, and it should be the first duty of the retailer to encourage them by catering to this class of trade. Every honest and reputable dealer has a great deal of influence with his customers. Those in the habit of dealing with a grocer who has always treated them squarely, will invariably take that grocer's word when it comes down to a question of quality. The retail grocer underestimates his influence in this regard. A great many grocers have not a trade for table luxuries, and it would be worse than folly for such grocers to stock up on a lot of fancy goods, and have them lie idle on their shelves. But the majority can sell goods of a fine quality, and those who have never tried should do so, and they would be surprised to know how very much they can accomplish. Even though they at first confine their purchase to a dozen or a half dozen, they will find it will pay them in the end. Begin in a small way and display such goods well to the front, where everyone coming in or going out can see them. A little attention to this all-important matter, and the grocer will find himself much better off in purse at the end of the year.

It is generally supposed that all grocers deal in such staples as pork, flour, sugar, molasses, etc., therefore there is no occasion for littering up the store with those unsightly affairs. There is money in fancy groceries, which most every grocer will find out if he would inform himself by making a practical test.—Grocers' Monthly Review.

THE MANUFACTURE OF OLIVE OIL.

The gathering of the olive is, as far as possible, done by hand, and the greatest care must be taken to pick only the dead-ripe olives, and to avoid breaking the bearing twigs which will produce the next year's crop. Coarse sheets are sometimes spread under the trees, and the fruit gently shaken off, so that only the perfectly light portion falls. It is then looked over, cleared of accidental admixture and inferior berries, and taken to the mills as soon as possible. The peasants often pretend that keeping the fruit till it ferments facilitates pressing and gives a larger yield. This is, however, only an excuse for delay, and any supposed advantage is more than counterbalanced by a deterioration of quality. The simplest and most primitive mill was one in which one or two large mill-stones travelled edgewise over a bed of hard stone. Oxen or horses attached to a strong radial axis furnished the power. In this way the fruit was reduced, stones and all, to a slimy paste. But more perfect and complete machinery of modern design has superseded the old picturesque oil mill, which, as far as France is concerned, is now only to be found in remote villages. Besides, changes in the arrangements of the industry have tended to do away with the old cumbrous mill. It is now very unusual for a farmer or olive grower to press his own crops. In all centres of olive culture, there are sure to be one or more professional oil pressers, who have embarked considerable capital in the requisite plant. Of these there are two classes. First, there are those who simply crush and press for the farmer who brings his crop to them, and who are paid in kind by retaining a percentage of the produce as agreed upon. Then there are others who may be called merchant crushers. These buy up olives from the growers and dealers, manufacture the oil, and sell it themselves. Several large firms in Marseilles possess branch mills in different centres of olive culture and in Algeria and Tunis, working upon a large scale, and their produce is as well known by its trade as are special wines. The system of the lower grade of oil crushers is obviously liable to abuses which are difficult to suppress, and the peasant frequently finds, when his oil is returned to him, it is very far below the calculation he had made of the probable yield of his crop. The crushed fruit is distributed into short squat sacks, made of esparto and horse hair, holding about 15lbs. each. The mouths of these scourtins, as they are called, are indrawn, as if half closed. Consequently when 10 or 12 of them are piled one above the other on the bed plate of the press the bottom of one bag rests on the mouth of the next below and perfectly closes it. When the pile is set true the press is worked very slowly and gradually. The oil oozes from all sides of the scourtins, and trickles from the delivery groove of the bed plate into a receiver. The first pressing is huile vierge—virgin oil—and has a delicate greenish colour, and a peculiar nutty flavour. Cleanliness in the crushing mill and press is an essential. Everything about the oil must be scrupulously clean, so that no colour or stale and rancid flavour be communicated to it. When the oil ceases to flow, the bags are taken out, and their hard, apparently dry contents broken up. The mass is mixed with boiling water, and steamed. A second time it is pressed, precisely as before, and the mixture of oil and water that comes away is allowed to stand till the oil has cleared and risen to the top. It is then syphoned off as a second quality oil. The marc, or residue, is either sold as oilcake for stock feeding or manure, or is treated by quite another class of manufacturers, who get from it a third quality of oil, suitable only for soap-making by treating it with chemicals, chiefly bisulphide of carbon. The processes up to this point do not admit of any variety, but the skill of different firms is supposed to be shown in clarifying and refining. The product of the presses is kept in immense tanks or in jars, till a sediment has deposited itself, when the clear oil is separated and filtered through specially prepared papers, through cotton, or other ways fancied to be trade secrets. It will be clear then, that olive growing and oil pressing are two distinct grades, and that they are best kept separate. Unless a grower had a large capital at command to work a mill, and kept a staff of skilled hands, he would never be able to attend to the digging, pruning and fertilizing of his olive trees, more particularly as this has to be done just at the same time of the year as the all important first pressing. The grower has plenty to do, if he attends to his work properly. Left to itself the olive tree certainly produces some fruit, but one well cultivated repays its owner ten-fold. An outlay of about £10 an acre is considered a sound investment. A full grown Pendoulier well cared for will give about 30 gallon measures of olives for its crop; the Cayon under similar circumstances may give an average of 7 or 8 gallons. The output of oil is about 14 per cent. for the two pressings.—The Provision Trades Gazette.

A MODERN PYRAMUS.

SCENE—Office of Messrs. Franklin & White.

Mail Clerk (stepping from telephone box)—Here, Carpenter, somebody wants you.

Carpenter—'Ll righ'! (Nods abstractedly, and totes a long column of figures before entering the box. The faint scratch of pens and rustle of paper alone break the silence, until the office boy, catching a glimpse of Carpenter's rapturous countenance, slyly opens the door,and fastens it back by a chair.) Carpenter (oblivious, and talking into the telephone)—You poor darling! And you didn't sleep a bit all the night? I do wonder (archly) what you could have been thinking of. (Pause.) No, I don't. Well, may be I do; but—you tell me!

Office boy (sotto voce, but audible to the clerical staff)—For pity's sake tell him! Dis suspense is killin' me.

Carpenter (still to telephone)—Were you? Were you, really? Did you think of your horrid old boy? (Pause.) Yes, he is horrid, too. But he loves you so he can't help being glad you—oh, my beautiful darling! (Passionately.) Do you love me? (Pause.) Do you love me, just a little bit? (Tenderly.) Do you love me? (A little disheartened now, but still tender.)

Office Boy (encouragingly, but sotto voce—Never say die!

Bookkeeper (with unfeeling scorn, also sotto voce)—Oh, come off!

Carpenter (at it again)—Do—you—love—me? (Pause.) I asked you (in patient despair) if you love me?

Mail Clerk (sotto voce)—Spell it!

Bookkeeper (sotto voce)—Ring up the Trouble Clerk.

Carpenter—Yes; I knew it! I only wanted (suddenly lapsing again into tenderness) to hear you say you did. Tell me one more time.

Office Boy (sotto voce)—He wants de eart' and heav'n too.

Carpenter—You know I never loved any one but you!

Mail Clerk (sotto voce) Ah, there! How about that Baltimore girl?

Carpenter - Ye-es. I slept—a little. But I dreamed of you all night long.

Carpenter's Room Mate (sotto voce) I bet he slept.

Carpenter—And I dreamed you—but you will think me awfully silly.

Sarcastic Chorus (sotto voce)—Oh, no!

Carpenter—Well, I dreamed that you—that you—kissed me!

Enthusiastic Chorus (sotto voce)—Um—um!

Carpenter—Well I was pretty busy; but that dosen't matter.

Junior Partner (sotto voce)—Oh, doesn't it?

Carpenter—I'll come early. Good by—you know how I would like to tell you good-by don't you?

Chorus (arising to the occasion aloud)—We do! (Kissing the backs of their hands) Smack! smack!! smack!!! smack!!!!

Carpenter (looking around, and suddenly taking in the situation; in agony)—Good-by! (Is about to ring off.) Nothing! Indeed' there's nothing the matter! (Pause.) Anybody hear us? Why, of course not!

Chorus (aloud)—Oh, no! Of course not!

Carpenter—You know I do—why do you want me to say it? (Suppressed laughter). Well, then, I—I—oh, you know I do!

Bookkeeper (heartlessly)—See him squirm.

Carpenter (nearly crazy)—Indeed, I—I—I—love—oh, hang it all! (Dashes from the box and flees into the hall in desperation, leaving the Office Boy to ring off).

Chorus (with a sigh of relief)—Ah-h-h!—Puck.

The Waterloo Advertiser announces that the Farnham beet root sugar factory has been seized by Sheriff Cotton, at the instance of Gault Bros., Montreal. The claims against the realty reach about $80,000. The sale is fixed for February.

SCIENCE OF STOREKEEPING.

"If you were to sum up the science of storekeeping, what would be its chief points?" was the question propounded to an old and experienced merchant the other day. "A good stock of goods, good name, good credit and good experience are the most important requisites for a merchant. A good stock of goods is the best 'store attraction' possible, and there is a natural reason for it. Merit, in the long run, will attract; good men draw the best people around them, and on the same principle, the best merchandise draws the best trade. I have customers of many years' standing, and they are among the best citizens. I have kept this trade because I dealt in honest fabrics, and never sailed under false colors.

"In the long course of years every business man finds his own level, and his trade partakes of the class of goods he keeps. If he sells a poor trade, it is because he deals in a poor class of merchandise, and for no other reason. I think the initial or starting point in successful storekeeping is an attractive stock of goods.

"The legitimate result of keeping good, honest assortments is a good name, and a good name in the community is a store attraction that has holding and staying power; people respect it and have confidence in it."—Ex.

A customer secured is a promise of greater salary in time.

Restore goods to their proper places as soon after using as possible.

Goods conveniently located save time, money and temper in showing.

The neglect to look after minute details in the factory is a source of great loss to many producers

Competition is keen and active, and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

"One man ov genius in 97 thousand 4 hundred and 42 men of ordinary business talent, is just about the right proportion for actual business."—JOSH BILLINGS.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2 00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

To say a man is narrow-minded is a reproach, and to say that he is broad-minded is a compliment. These propositions are true with reference to opinion, but not with reference to action. Men of thought, in the domain of morals, religion, politics, science, etc., should take broad views and proceed upon them, but men of action must usually proceed upon narrow views, especially if they have to work against opponents. The business man is a man of action. His conception of business may be liberal or it may be contracted, but he will find that it is best to focus all his energies upon it. Narrowness must be cultivated by the man who would succeed in trade. The amplitude of mental grasp that qualifies a man to run a store, a farm, a gristmill, be a magistrate, take an active part in local politics, belong to two or three fraternal or secret societies and be a success in everything is rare. This many-sidedness is a dangerous thing for a business man to exhibit before he has begun to write his capital in a notation of six figures. That sort of thing may be all very well for men who have got past the breakers that lie along the very shore of success, for men who are able to pay for capable financial management. Even for those who have the money-power to run several concerns at once, narrowness is necessary for the success of these. Narrowness means concentration, and one must concentrate one's powers the more on one's business the more that business expands or branches out. There is no spare energy for public service or political glory. Broad-mindedness or versatility means shallowness in a business man.

Narrowness is the fundamental element in all business success. A single point is kept in view, all side issues, no matter how tempting, are disregarded. The aim is kept in sight, every little gain brings it closer, and soon it becomes the absorbing object of the plodder's attention. The man who clearly selects something as the object of the first half of an average life, and gets into the habit of letting that object over-rule his wayward inclinations, is sure to realize that object if he lives, but narrowness of view is involved in the very singleness of his purpose. The business man who sets before himself and steadily pursues an object, will be accumulating substance, while his broad minded competitor will be dissipating his power over several objects. The strict business man has no time for anything but business. His very narrowness will beget breadth. This is paradoxical, but it is true within the limits of a business man's care. Constant contemplation of the one object, constant study of the means to accomplish it, constant husbanding of resources, cannot fail to broaden and strengthen the mind that is engaged in such work. Such a mind will in a few years have far wider commercial compass than will that of the man who is busy in many spheres of activity. The following up of a single object is an excellent training and unfolds a man's powers wonderfully.

This is an age of specialists. It is necessarily so. The book of knowledge is growing every year, and it would be folly for any man to attempt a mastery of even a very few things as they are known now. Consequently there is a division of knowledge as there is a division of labor each man is supposed to know something one well. If he be thoroughly versed in that, he will be an exceptional man. Narrowing as the tendency of special occupation is it it a great means of developing knowledge. For the contraction in breadth it makes up in depth. It liberalizes and invigorates instead of enfeebling or enslaving our minds. No man will find he has too little to do if he gives faithful study and attention to the matters that concern any person in trade in this country. He is always on the alert against competitors; he has to save his profits by close buying, cash buying, selection of goods, etc.; he has to watch over his resources that he may lose little or none through misplaced credit; he has to please his customers; he has to advertise; he has to have enterprise, and now and then do a clever thing; he has to keep abreast of the times in his methods, his stock, his knowledge of the market, and a thousand details furnish nooks and corners wherein to dispose his attention. He has to vary the routine of his life by the use of changes as often as possible, and that necessity will make a bright, active, earnest man, fertile in expedients for the improvement of his business. "The penny saved is the penny made," "Look out for the cents and the dollars will look after themselves," are good maxims, but are not the only ones learned and practised by the trader who concentrates and expends freely his energy, his time and his talents upon his business. He will be rich in experience, and probably in money, before he is an old man. Method grows out of narrownees and concentration. The amount of method that can be introduced into even a small business is incredible. The real breadth that is born of this sort of narrowness may be expressed in these words: That a man of many-sided activity will rarely succeed in business, but a man who has succeeded in business will succeed in nearly anything else.

HYPERBOLICAL ADVERTISEMENTS

On the boards of road fences, in the newspapers of country towns, and in circulars scattered among consumers, one will occasionally meet a style of language that rivals in exaggeration the most magnificent efforts of the Oriental poets. Only in the matter of exaggeration is comparison allowable. If there was any proportionate fancy involved in the wording or the conception of the advertisement, the effect of the unreasonable superlatives would be melted down, perhaps by the humor or perhaps by some catchy quality in the phrasing of the form adopted. But plain, unvarnished lying is an exhausted resource; it has done all it can do in the way of bringing into prominence the merchant or his stock, but is still potent to bring both into disrepute. Exaggeration that is intentionally adopted with the object of making people laugh, is of course transparent, and is not resorted to for the purpose of abusing people's credulity. There is usually a form of expression that reveals the meaning of the advertiser, whose purpose is to crack a joke with those who pass by, not to boast extravagantly.

But how overwhelmed some stores must seem to be by the pretensions of their advertisements. Stores, whose claims as put forth in advertisements completely eclipse the reality, are beginning to fall into their true place, and are among business houses what braggarts are among men. Their absurd pretensions of superiority to everything else in existence estranges rather than attracts trade. A very humble little shop in a rather squalid part of this city is in mind. On its front appears the legend, "The cheapest store in the city." The thing was more pitiful than laughable. It seemed like cruel irony. Not an extreme case. It is probably a more pardonable one than the majority of similar cases of foolish advertising swagger. The great number of those who magnify themselves in advertisements do so, not in remote corners of their district, not to an ignorant lot of people, but to the intelligent, respectable public. They cannot expect to be believed, for their unveracious stories are usually palpably so, because of the wide sweep and ambitiousness of what they profess to be able to do.

"The cheapest store in the country," "the lowest prices ever heard of," "the finest goods ever offered to the public," "positively must all be sold in a fortnight," "selling below cost," are a few of the phrases that challenge reason and common sense along the high-ways and the by-ways. What excuse is there for such stuff? It is not believed by anybody, and reflecting people do not like it. They feel that the man who advertises in such a style must believe them to be grossly stupid if he thinks they can be deceived by a lot of downright lies. The fence boards, the public prints, the little sheets that fly from hand to hand ought not to be defaced with such common, played-out gasconade. Lying, as we said before, is an exploded device. The majority who resort to it do so from force of habit, because it had become conventional to use extravagant terms of business supremacy in advertising. The untruthful advertisement in fact is an outgrowth of overstrained competition. It is a bad outgrowth, but not the worst of that abnormal condition of trade. But it is an index to the rest. If traders are driven to state flagrant untruths in their advertisements, what security have their customers that these traders will tell them the truth in representations made of goods sold? Can they depend on the honesty of men whose advertisement stands in the market place with improbability, impossibility, stamped on the face of it? Let the fitness of things, above all let truth, be respected in advertisements.

CIVIL SERVICE DEBTORS.

A wholesome lesson to delinquent civil service debtors was administered by Judge Ross last week at the Ottawa Division Court, in the case of O'Meara vs McRae. This was an action to recover $24 on a judgment summons after default. The defendant admitted he was in receipt of $2 per day, Sundays included. The Judge upon being satisfied that McCrae could afford to pay his debts addressed him thus:

"I am going to be very severe with you civil servants, every mother's son of you. I will make an order for peremptory payment, failing that I shall commit you to jail. You shall pay down $6 and 30 per cent, a month of your salary."

Defendant—"But you do not understand."

Judge—"Oh, yes, I do, and I will do the same thing with every civil servant that comes before me, and it is as well they should know it." Judgment was accordingly given.

That is the sort of medicine that some of these gentry need an occasional dose of, and it is a pity they did not get more of it. It is a shame that honest tradesmen have no better protection against civil servants who are capable of taking advantage of their position for purposes of fraud. The fact that their wages cannot be garnished does not afford complete immunity to them. A little exposure to the head of their department is usually a quick way to effect recovery of the debt. The position is apt to be untenable for a man who is notorious for his neglect to pay his bills. In the departments of the local governments of the various provinces there are men not above the meanness of shirking payment for what they and their families lived on. Employes of civic corporations also frequently evince a disinclination to pay their just debts. The same is true of many men employed by railways, only in this case it is not entire immunity from the garnishee law that befriends them. One of the railway companies it is understood makes it a rule to discharge any man who will persist in owing what he is able to pay. Such influences on the trader's side ought to be made more of, and complaint to the head of a government department, the chairman of a municipal committee or board of works, or the manager of the employing concern will usually hasten payment.

THE GAUDY CALENDAR.

As the old year shades into the new, the flight of calendars usually begins to grow thick, and myriads of prettily designed plans of the new year are carried over the mails. This year, however, there has been a wonderfully marked falling-off in calendars. As compared with last year the number of calendars received at this office is exceedingly meagre. The lithographers also report a big decline in this part of their late season's business. The calendar appears to be going out as a diffuser of advertising matter. It has proved itself an unsatisfactory instrument for the purposes of the advertiser. Business fame is not to be won by it. We showed the reasons for this in an article that appeared above a year ago in this paper. The business notice or card upon the calendar is completely overlaid by that portion which may be called the chronicle. In the same way the dial of a clock would cast in the shade any accidental marks upon it, anything irrelevant to the purpose of indicating the time. It is for that purpose the calendar or clock is consulted, and a very slight impression can anything else make that is sought to be forced upon the observer's attention. Also there is an increasing aversion on the part of recipients to be the sandwich men of the issuers of these calendars. The person who receives a calendar intends to make use of it for his own purposes, and does not care always to make an advertising bureau of his office or his library More and more, opinion is becoming settled as to the true place of the advertisement. That place for the retailer is the newspaper. The character of the advertisement as news is becoming more distinct, and advertisements will be read in whatever medium has a reputation for giving news. When the chief distributors of news were the gossips of the town, it would have paid a man in business to pay these for mentioning his announcements, for then he would have been making use of a distinct agency of news. For the manufacturer and wholesaler the approved trade journal is the proper circulator of advertisements, for it deals with the facts that most concern the business of the men whose interest in the wholesaler's or manufacturer's wares is essential to trade. The calendar has been well tried; it has indeed been overworked. Its mission as an advertising medium has been a failure.

SACRIFICING GOODS.

Is it well to cut prices in order to force the sale of a certain class of goods? It must be admitted that it is not just to brother merchants in all cases. There is a certain esprit de corps which every merchant should try to obtain and foster, and which will tend to keep the trade from degenerating into paltry oppositionists. Nevertheless, in many cases cutting of price must be resorted to for self-preservation, and this should be done carefully and systematically.

One of the largest retailers in Toronto sells goods on the principle that if they will not sell for $1, they will for 50c., if not for that then for 25c. The dealer must not allow his stock to accumulate nor depreciate in value. Goods must not be kept on the shelf for two or three years waiting for a purchaser. There must be a ceaseless turning-over of stock. A man should know his stock and know when not to delay the sacrifice. The time to do this is not when the trade in that article is over, but just before the demand for it is about to slacken. Then, if a dealer has a large stock of a particular line which is liable to go out of fashion or fluctuate in value, he is wise to make a push to clear it out, if not at full prices, then at slowly reducing prices until the public are tempted and he is relieved. The essence of the transaction is that a dealer's money must never be locked up in goods which are liable to depreciate in value.

FROST-COATED WINDOWS.

The following suggestion as to the best means of keeping windows clear of frost was called forth by our request last week under the inquiry of a correspondent :—

DEAR GROCER,—In your issue of the 1st inst. you want to know how to keep store windows, which have no back partition, free from frost. Try this : Wash the windows very clean, and then with a clean cloth, and with no dust flying about, rub the glass over with pure glycerine. Of course, the glass with this on will catch more dust than one without, but it will certainly keep clean a week or two, and that is as long as a store window ought to remain without a fresh display of goods. Another hint : Put very few goods on display at one time, and, if possible, one kind of goods—say canned goods one week, fruit another, etc. A sample of everything kept inside displayed in a window is not "catchy" and looks cheap. Never show biscuits in a shop window. If you want to show the tins or boxes of a certain manufacturer, get him to label you a few empties. FORT.

A large number of the leading wholesale grocery firms, of Montreal, agreed to give their employes an extra New Year's holiday by closing their stores from Thursday evening till Monday morning. The Toronto houses would have lost little by being equally generous.

QUESTIONS FOR ASSOCIATIONS.

We have noticed several times of late, a complaint that association attendance was on the decline, says the National Grocer, and that there was coniderably less interest taken in association work than had been in times gone by. The complaint certainly does not come from one particular part of the country, but it comes in a kind of universal manner all round. There have been many suggestions regarding how this annoying feature could be changed. It must not be overlooked that the fact of a poor attendance does not mean that association work is on the wane. It only points out the necessity, that in order to keep the interest in association matters up to the proper pitch, there should not be any lagging of matters interesting to the trade brought under discussion. We have noticed how many times the attendance at association meetings has been increased by the last revival of in the discussion of matters which are of vital interest to the trade. It is just like the question of religious revival, so long as the public interest can be kept up, then so long will the attendance be large.

As we have said before, however, it is not necessary for a large attendance at association meetings for reform and good work to be kept up. Still, the larger the attendance is the more likely it will be that the action and work of the association will be of a representative character. There are, at the same time, more likely to be found new workers who are willing and able to continue the good work which has been begun by others. It is necessary in all association matters that new blood be brought into the actual work of the association, because it enhances the interest and creates, in many cases, very good workers, and thus assists in the general reformation of the trade.

There are abundant subjects which if properly brought under the notice of associations would create such an interest that the attendance would be large, and the enthusiasm for work greatly increased. All great movements of reform, whether social, religious or political have to be accomplished upon similar lines, and the accomplishment, to a very large extent, depends upon the enthusiasm which can be developed in many ways by the leaders and organizers. We have often pointed out the fact, that one of the things which the merchants' movement suffers from is the lack of organizing force. It would be quite another question if the organizing force of the country could be thoroughly developed, brought, as it were, under one directing influence, so that it could be concentrated and developed in such a manner, that the highest results could be obtainable.

So far as subjects for discussion are concerned, the trade itself is best fitted to bring those forward which are of the most interest, but we think that the suggestion made by one of our correspondents would not be a bad one for practical discussion. Lack of energy in association work is no doubt an evidence that the interest of the trade is hardly so great as it was, and that an effor should be made by the leaders to bring about a resuscitation of the old time interest in association work.

MAXIMS FOR 1892.

Pin these up before your mind's eye ; it is a new year, and you should gather in a few ideas so as to promote improvement in yourself and your business.

I am a hustler.

Little bustle but much progress.

Some advertisements might aid business growth.

Don't wait for business to grow—push it.

KITING CHECKS.

Generally speaking, the purpose of the man who "kites" checks is to gain time rather than money. A, for example, owes B $5,000. The day comes when he must pay or take ruinous consequences. He has a small balance in bank—say $896.70. After banking hours on the day when payment must be made A gives B a check for $5.000. B deposits it in his bank the next day and it arrives at A's bank the day after. Meanwhile A scurries around among his friends to borrow money enough to meet the check. He appeals to C, who has no such sum as $5,000 at all. But on A's assurance that "it will be all right," he accepts $87.34 in money and A's check, "to be used to-morrow," for $4,443 82. This A deposits and his credit is thereby increased to $5,840.55, so that when the check he gave to B comes in there is a fictitious but unsuspected sufficiency to meet it.

Before the check A gave to C has reached A's bank two or three more days have passed, and thus by securing the kind offices of other friends he can keep his and their worthless checks in motion almost indefinitely. If finally he scrapes together the actual cash which he should have originally paid, his account becomes really good, and what might have been a loss to any of a dozen banks is averted.

If a reasonable degree of care is taken, the fact that he has been "kiting" checks may not be suspected at his bank. His motive in making a small money payment to C, which practice he continues with each person of whom he borrows, is in order that the checks he gives may always be written in different figures than those he receives. This is usually an effective blind, for unless the bank officials have some outside cause to suspect the integrity of a depositor, they will not be likely to investigate each deposit and each draft—the only course by which the relation existing between drafts and deposits can be detected.—American Storekeeper.

TOMATO PACK---1891.

We present herewith the twelfth annual report of the tomato pack throughout the United States and Canada. The total output is slightly ahead of that of 1890, and is only 263,667 cases above the annual average pack for the previous four years. It appears that since 1887 the output has been almost stationary so far as regards quantity, which goes to show that the number of factories diminishes rather than increases, or else that packers are turning attention to the canning of a different class of goods. At the prices which have ruled for the past few years the production of standard tomatoes cannot be classed as a profitable industry. The total production of tomatoes in 1891 was 3,405,365 cases, against 3,166,177 cases in 1890, showing an increase of 239,188 cases. The pack was heaviest in New Jersey, where it exceeded that of the previous year by over 16 per cent. In Maryland it shows a marked decrease. In some of the Western States there are very satisfactory gains. These changes are largely due to climatic conditions and are a very unsafe index to the actual status of the tomato canning establishments. Our estimate in detail compares with the returns for the previous year as follows:—

New Jersey	950,833	815,485
Maryland	744,010	949,157
Indiana	341,217	243,920
Delaware	264,950	230,025
California	218,311	222,173
New York	114,774	101,952
Virginia	98,360	95,694
Iowa	94,800	98,904
Ohio	90,590	75,060
Missouri	90,350	28,400
Canada	83,000	73,246
Michigan	73,506	51,484
Illinois	68,324	32,250
Kansas	50,700	29,590
Nebraska	26,900	5,670
Pennsylvania	15,000	21,285
Connecticut	14,400	15,500
Colorado	12,600	4,500
Massachusetts	10,000	18,000
Kentucky	10,000	14,972
Arkansas	14,500	20,000
Tennessee	6,840	1,910
Texas	4,500	10,850
North Carolina	3,900	3,150
Georgia	3,000	3,000
Total	3,405,365	3,166,177

The above statement is based almost entirely upon returns received from packers, commission agents, brokers and special correspondents. The total represents the minimum number of cases packed. The total output in 1891 compares with the pack of previous years as follows:—

Year—	Cases of 2 dozen.
1890	3,166,177
1889	2,976,765
1888	3,343,137
1887	2,817,048
Total for five years	15,708,493
Average per year	3,141,698
Average per year 1889-91	3,182,769

We think that the general average quality of the pack of 1891 is superior to that of 1890; the weather on the Atlantic Coast being very advantageous to growers, particularly in New Jersey and Delaware. The supply of high grade or hand packed goods continues to be below trade requirements. There has been the same variation in quotations as have existed in previous years. This difference amounts to as much as from 25 to 50 cents per dozen, and yet this great variation does not seem to stimulate packers to raise the standard of quality and establish a steady and permanent demand for their products at high figures. It is safe to say there is not a packer of high grade tomatoes in the United States whose product is not sold before the packing season is well advanced.—American Grocer.

A FEW QUESTIONS FOR 1892.

Have you taken account of stock, and are you satisfied with financial results from last year's business?

Have you considered any improvement in your method of business, whereby the labor of yourself, wife or help can be lessened?

Are you as careful as you might be in your daily business transactions? Do you weigh, count, measure or gauge everything you buy?

Do you get 180 pounds of potatoes to each barrel that you buy, or do you take any weight offered to you?

Are you sure that you get full count as marked on each barrel or box of eggs?

How about your tares on butter tubs? Do you pay butter prices for wood, pickle or salt?

Do you pay full price for snide boxes of cranberries? Can you tell a snide box when you see it?

Do you pay your bills promptly and take advantage of all discounts for prompt settlements?

Do you keep a watchful eye on your clerks when weighing or measuring goods?

Do your clerks endeavor to push the sales of teas and coffees? If not, is it not your fault?

Do you not think it would pay you to hire a cashier to handle your money and take care of your books?

Do you, when asked for credit, make proper inquiry as to the responsibility of the applicant before granting the same?

Do you know how much per cent. you are making on your sales of goods?

Do you allow any margin for waste, shrinkage or other sources of loss on goods when making your calculations for profits?

Do you render bills promptly and insist upon payment as per agreement made?

Do you depend upon the judgment of the salesmen when purchasing teas or coffees, or are you able to judge of the quality you want?

Do you know that you miss many good things by not subscribing for and reading your trade paper? Many dollars are saved by careful readers.

Do you know that it will pay you to attend the meetings of your association? You will become better acquainted with your fellow members in the trade. You will be astonished to find that there are many who are your peers in the grocery business.—N. Y. Grocers' Advocate.

At the meeting of the Dominion Central Circle in Hamilton there were delegates from Toronto and Hamilton circles. The constitution was revised and officers were elected as follows:—R. M. Stewart, Hamilton, president; E. Fielding, Toronto, secretary-treasurer; J. C. Ascott, London, vice-president; J. Carter, Montreal, chaplain; T. Gain and Will T. Spence were appointed to draft a circular showing to merchants the benefits of the circle.

WHOLESOME QUALITIES OF SUGAR

A correspondent of the London Produce Markets' Review writes as follows :

I have only this morning seen the Spectator for October 31, 1891. It contains an article headed "Tall Girls." The following extract will interest those who are engaged in the cane sugar industry : "Nothing improves physique like good milk ; that and porridge, is the cause of the tall Highlanders, Irishmen, Sikhs, and the little children of our day are nourished on cream and water, or milk procured from the great dairies, which is as good as milk can be, and as different from the milk of 30 years ago as brand is different from old beef-tea. Then a prejudice of an extraordinarily injurious character—we write these sentences on first-class medical evidence—has silently, no one knows why entirely disappeared. Nothing nourishes like good sugar, possessing as it does just the requisite heat-giving quality ; but the mothers of 1830-50 dreaded sugar. They had an idea that it sickened babies, who always crave for it like horses for salt. They therefore withheld sugar, thus leaving the children half nourished, and permanently sensitive to a climate which, for seven months in the year, is always chilly. Nowadays everybody among the cultivated knows that sugar is beneficial, and the children are left to their instincts, with the result that they make flesh and are almost always warm."

I should be glad if other papers would publish this extract. In the West Indies, during crop time, the mules and cattle become fat and sleek by drinking the skimmings of the cane juice taken from it in the process of boiling. The comparison between their condition during crop time and when the mills are not crushing is remarkable, and testifies to the fattening power of any extract of sugar. The English farmer would find his stock greatly improved by the use of molasses or low-priced sugar. Inferior hay when so mixed would be devoured greedily.

HINTS ON PACKING AND SHIPPING BUTTER.

Some months ago we attempted to explain why so much inferior butter is shipped to market. We suggested that the competition between country merchants for the patronage of the farmers render the former too careless in regard to the quality of the butter which they purchase from the latter, and that so long as a country grocer could sell groceries to a farmer he would accept from him without objection butter hardly salable, and even pay a price far beyond its real value. That this was and still is true of the the manner of purchasing butter in many sections of the country, we have the statements of several grocers who have suffered from this form of competition, but no doubt there are other reasons why the supply of poor butter is excessive, and the Chicago Produce Trade Reporter, in an article on the proper keeping and shipping of the staple, suggests one very important reason which country grocers, or those at least who are responsible therefor, have in their power to remove. It says :

"Yet the entire responsibility of the quality of butter at the time it arrives on the market does not by far rest wholly on the butter-maker. Many country merchants that buy and barter this article keep large quantities of good butter on their counters, or in open, dirty boxes in their storeroom, exposed to the fumes of coal oil, fish, paints, tar, fertilizers, tobacco smoke, etc. Yet many of them do not give it a thought that the longer butter is so exposed the more money they are out of pocket, and consequently the smaller their bank account.

"This is only one way some country merchants have of reducing the quality of their butter. There are many others—probably some with which we are not familiar ; all of them can only be avoided by care and thoughtfulness. It is to those merchants and shippers that we address these words. Commission men are often severely censured by such careless shippers, after receivers have tried very hard, although in vain, to place such butter on the market at top prices ; the fault entirely lies with the shipper.

"Butter should only be placed or rehandled in a cool, dry cellar or room, which should solely be used for that purpose. Never should it come in contact with any foreign odors of any kind or be exposed to the air any longer than is absolutely necessary to prepare it for shipment. In packing butter always use new tubs or firkins. Scald the package out with hot water, then replace the hot with cold water and let it stand for fifteen or twenty minutes, then pour it out and rub the sides and bottom of the package with fine salt. Never allow the hands to come in contact with the butter, as their natural warmth and heat is very injurious.

"Place the butter in the package with paddles and press it down firmly as you pack. Always fill the package well and fully; then level off the butter a little below the top of the package, place a clean muslin cloth over the butter and spread a small quantity of salt on top of the cloth. Fasten the lid on tight with three or four pieces of strap iron, one end being tacked on top of the lid and the other end on the side of the package. Then mark the gross weight and tare on the package. Keep in a cool place and ship as soon as possible, for age never improves butter.

"We know that good packages are a little more expensive and that proper care requires time and labor, but the better prices obtained for the goods so handled will more than pay for the packages and time and care required."—Merchants' Review.

EAST INDIAN GINGER IN THE LONDON MARKET.

The London Commercial Record reviews the market for East Indian ginger as follows : "The great activity lately displayed in ginger has somewhat subsided, and a quieter tone has taken it's place. Prices, both for spot and arrival, have in consequence experienced a slight decline, but next to no business transpired, although shippers tried very hard to tempt buyers with cheap offers, especially of white washed Cochin. Fifty tons of this description were offered at 38s. 6d., c.i.f., without, however, eliciting a single counter bid. There can be no doubt the large and continual offers of washed rough Cochin thrown upon our market by almost every shipper in the trade thoroughly frightened the buyers, and prompted them to abstain from purchasing further at present. We are told on good authority that the total sales of washed rough Cochin so far amount to from 300 to 400 tons, at prices varying from 39s. to 42s. 6d. c. i. f., a very respectable quantity, especially if we take into consideration the practical obscurity which this particular kind of ginger up to the present had enjoyed. Hitherto it was not deemed worth the attention of speculators, but the Calicut crop being a failure again, and next to no supplies expected from that quarter, any sort of ginger apparently sufficed to satisfy speculation. Had the offers been brought forward more judiciously we feel confident the market would have maintained its firm position, for after all the Cochin crop is only a limited one, at the best of times not exceeding 1,000 tons, or about one-third of the Calicut crop. Its poor quality used not to be considered good enough for the European markets; it merely served to supply the wants of the less particular native. However, it has attained some importance this year, and we trust that it may prove a first-class speculative article to those who have raised it to this high position. Further large transactions in it may hardly be anticipated, and with the new year and the falling off of fresh offers a moderate revival of the past activity may with some amount of certainty be predicted."

Why is the Star Fire Lighter better than Coal Oil ?

BECAUSE:
It is less expense than coal oil.
No trouble in preparing kindling.
It is more effective, one square will burn 10 to 15 minutes, and is warranted to light a fire without coal oil or kindling.
It is cleaner, and is perfectly safe.

EVOLUTION IN BUSINESS.

Holiday times with its glorious festivities some times bring about reminiscences which if they are not gratifying may be considered at least interesting and at the same time instructive. Even the grocery trade, dull and uninteresting as it sometimes appears to be, has received the impress at times as well as many of the benefits of progressive evolution. Those young in the business are absolutely unacquainted with the peculiarities and difficulties which existed in the business in the memory of some of those now living. Let some of those now engaged in business picture to themselves the grocery store as seen by the writer some thirty years ago. Instead of the incandescent electric light there was hung about the store in questionably clean candlesticks dipped candles weighing about eight to the pound. At one end of the store there was a clerk industriously cutting loaf sugar with a hatchet, managing, perhaps, to chop about a pound of sugar in five minutes. At another part of the store was a large sugar mill which was used for crushing West Indian sugar, and a big tray near in which various grades were put in and mixed. One of the clerks was suffering from the evil effects of the sugar mite. Going down into the cellar things were no better than in the store. There was a clerk engaged in cleaning fruit with a solitary candle by his side. His hands on being washed were of a very darkish brown color, the action of the fruit in the sieve making stained hands as to almost disfigure them. Things appeared to go very slow indeed in the store. Customers came in more like as if they were going to pay a visit in a social manner than to purchase goods. Nearly every one carried a basket in which they placed the goods purchased and took them home with them. The order clerk was apparently unknown in this store and there was certainly very little about the store that was attractive. The hours of labor were very long, commencing at 5 o'clock in the morning and extending in a beneficent kind of manner up to 9 or 10 o'clock at night. The only cheerful aspect in the old store in comparison to a modern one was the genuine healthy appearance of all concerned. Work long and hard appeared to agree with the constitutions of everybody in the store.

The quality of the goods sold, however, is the point in which there is the greatest contrast to the present day. The loaf sugar which was being industriously chopped would be practically unsalable to-day, as it was about the color of a fine manilla paper. The whitest sugar in the place was some Barbadoes. Canned goods were practically unknown, at least in that store, Tea was sold at a dollar a pound and was in quality equal to about half that price to-day. Coffee, perhaps, was quite as good as it is now, and so on, the quality of the goods which were consumed bore a marked contrast to what is sold to-day.

The question is, Which has benefited most by the evolution of business—the grocer, the clerk or the consumer? When the modern store is considered in all its advantages there appears to be no doubt that the consumer received the greatest benefit, the clerk the next and employer the least. It would be practically impossible to find a clerk to-day who would be willing to go through the hardship which a clerk had to do in the store named above. Even now in some stores which are not well regulated the owner is obliged to recruit his staff from newly-arrived immigrants. The rapid changes which have taken place in New York during the last ten years have been all favorable to a better condition of employes. Of course the employer has received his reward with having more rest and less anxiety about his business. The better regulated a store is the more likely it is that the owner will obtain and retain good clerks. Anything which tends to elevate a store cannot help but have an elevating influence upon all those concerned—the owner, the clerk and the customer. Let progressive evolution continue,—National Grocer.

POINTS FOR CLERKS.

Those who read an article by Professor Wells on "How to Work," may recall his first table of commandments about labor which were to be remembered by the letter P; do not procrastinate, do not putter; read work's parables; remember the promises. His second table he fixes by the vowels A, E, I, O, U.

First, be ambitious. A great man once wished to select from a crowd of applicants a teacher for his young boys. "Now for a test," he said, "you shall each show me how you would teach my sons to do one of the simplest things, to break a stone in two." So he led them to a pile of boulders. The first took the hammer, and quite dexterously split a slab of limestone. "Very neat," remarked the great man, "but limestone is easily broken." The second, with a shrewd blow, parted a mass of hard quartz. "Better," said the great man; but something is lacking still." The third chose an equally large piece of quartz, broke it nicely, and then selected a very tough boulder of greenstone. The hammer fell sharply, and the obstinate stone was scattered. "That's what I want my sons taught," said the great man,—"to go on from what is hard to what is harder."

The great man understood what parts mediocrity from success. The first is content with mastery of the difficult. The second takes to heart Browning's grand words:

"Ah, but a man's reach should exceed his grasp
Or what's heaven for?"

"Good things are hard." That was Plato's favorite saying. But Plato himself would agree that what is good fades to worse and worst unless the worker goes on to harder and hardest. Be ambitious.

Then be easy. That is, never be contented until your work has become second nature to you. You know how the young girl learns to play on the piano. How like witchery it seems, as her white fingers flash rippling along the keys, moving them to obedient music! But that pliant dexterity came by way of stiff knuckles, aching muscles, weary hours, strong patience, and the "try" that means "triumph."

Do you remember how it was when you learned to ride the bicycle; how tensely you held your arms, and how bent was your mind on turning your wheel to balance the push on the opposite pedal; how your brain whirled and your shoulders complained at the end of your first mile? Now you pedal instinctively, and you turn the wheel to and fro with no consciousness of effort.

And the girl does not really play the piano, nor the boy ride the bicycle, nor any worker do any work at his best, until this thing has happened to him, that his work has become his play. "What we must do," says Coleridge, "let us love to do." It is a noble chemistry that turns necessity into pleasure. And so against our sixth labor commandment, Be ambitious—go on from hard to harder—we must hasten to set this seventh, Be easy—continue at the hard work until it has become play to you.

Next, be Intelligent. Add to your work that last important item in the old lady's recipe for bread, "Stir in a little judgment," said the dear old soul. You want me to estimate the yield of that wheat field? Let me see. Rich, deep loam. Good situation. Ought to give twenty bushels to the acre. But stay. Let me see the farmer. That stupid, lazy lout. The field will not give ten bushels to the acre, such a good year as this. "As the man is worth, his land is worth," says the shrewd Frenchman.

"Stir in judgment." Do not make two trips of it with one hand full when the filling of both hands might finish it in one trip. Do not run upstairs to bring something down and then go up again to take something up. Do not go down town for a stick of sealing-wax, and after your return bethink yourself of the meat you must get for dinner. Do not hunt through the book page by page when a glance at the index would show you what you wish.

The old proverb is right. "Contrivance is better than hard work," not merely because it is more enconomical of God-given strength and time, but because it puts our work on a higher plane. For what does Ruskin tell us? "It is only by labor that thought can be made healthy, and only by thought that labor can be made happy." Be intelligent, then, as well as ambitious and easy.

Competition is keen and active, and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

The action was brought by the Messrs. division is on the following basis :—Capital and annual salaries and wages are added together to make one sum, and all profits over 6 per cent. interest are to be so divided that a dollar of earnings receives the same profit as a dollar of capital. The proposition was submitted to the hands and accepted unanimously. This is the first arrangement for profit-sharing ever made in St. John.

A commercial traveller walked tnto an East End London grocery store the other day and deposited his grip on the counter. After he had laid out his stock of samples and taken out some of the advertising matter which he had, he stepped to one side for a quiet chat with the grocer. While his back was turned one of the clerks removed the remaining advertising matter from the grip and filled it with that of a firm which is a rival of the one represented by the drummer. The man of much cheek soon fastened up the grip, without noticing what had been done, and bade the grocer "good day," saying that he was going to call on a certain grocer on the west side. While he was on the way, the man whom he was about to visit was informed of the joke by telephone, and as soon as the drummer walked in the wink was given to the bystanders. The salesman, as he unpacked his grip, began to discourse on the inferior quality of the goods put up by the rival firm, and his dismay may be imagined as he pulled out a profusion of the advertising matter of the concern he had been running down.

CHOOSING A BUSINESS.

The all-important question to every young man when he arrives at that age where he begins to look about him for the purpose of settling upon something as his life's work, says an exchange, is one that is not always easily determined or judiciously considered.

Advice upon this subject is frequently but slightly appreciated, as most young men consider themselves capable of choosing for themselves. However, it is fair to suppose that the experiences of others are worth something, and when these experiences have proven successful they are all the more worthy of consideration.

We judge of a man's success by the fortune he has accumulated in the business he has chosen to follow, and upon this theory the following advice, from one of the most successful men of the present time, Mr. Russell Sage, is worth a careful study. He says : "The question of choosing a business is a serious one. As a rule, a young man should adopt the calling for which he has a preference. If he has no particular choice, it would be well for him to try different occupations, until he finds one that suits him. I do not counsel changing about to gratify a spirit of uneasiness, for once a young man is installed in the business that he is suited to, he ought to stick to it. I have known young men who entered employments reluctantly, and after a trial became fond of them. A young man must be determined to succeed. After all, there is one great lever, and that is will power. Without it very few men succeed.

"It depends on the circumstances whether failures betray incapacity in a man. If a failure is due to a cause not general, then it may be attributed to lack of foresight and understanding. A shrewd merchant will not stock up with unsalable things; a shrewd farmer will not plant his ground to raise unsalable crops. Both the merchant and the farmer must find out what is salable, and act accordingly. There are exigencies, to be sure, like contagions, disasters, combinations, strikes and boycotts, that cannot be foreseen. The prudent man of business has prepared himself to stand losses from such causes, and when the troubles have passed the fact of his having weathered them makes his financial position in the community stronger than ever. The present condition of the coal trade well illustrates the uncertainty of things. The mild open winter could not be foreseen, and has caused great dullness and loss in the trade. Then there is the march of improvement. This is an age of competition, and it requires energy and perception to meet it. It used to take 90 days to find out the condition of the tea crop in Japan or the coffee crop in Brazil. Now the inquiry can be sent and an answer scured in a single day.

"The young man should start out in the world by the time he is 21. If he is qualified to begin life at an earlier age he should do it. I began as a clerk when I was 12. At 18 I was in business for myself, and I have kept my sign up ever since. I should say that the average boy could take a clerkship at the age of 16 or 18. A wrong start may not mean a permanent failure. Many of the most successful men have started wrong and afterward righted themselves. There are many instances where men educated for the pulpit have gone to the bar and been conspicious successes. Then, again, men educated for the bar have gone to the pulpit and achieved success."—American Cultivator.

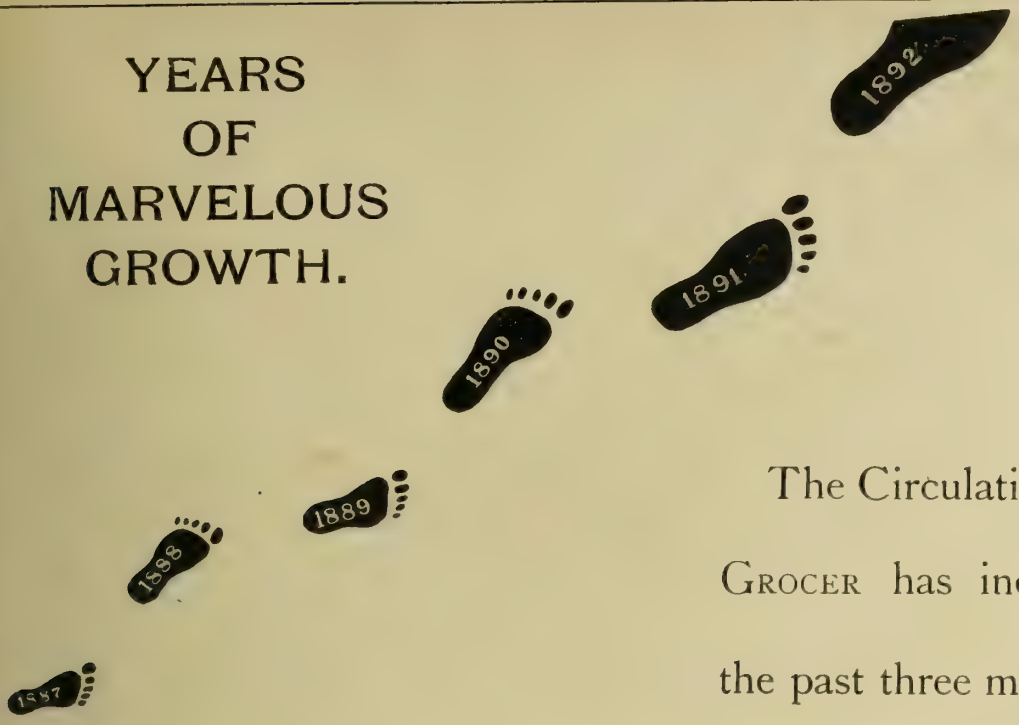
YES, CANADA CAN DO IT.

Drown all the mineral waters in Yankeedom out of sight with St. Leon. Just as the stars are lost to sight in the bright halo of the morning sun, so the great Canadian St. Leon Mineral Water outshines all. July 18 Mayor Thompson, Lawrence, Mass., wires : Repeat June shipments, great demand for St. Leon ; also large orders to Vancouver, Dublin Ireland, besides the great increase locally.

Credit is often too cheap and overbuying far too common. Don't be guilty of the one, and don't abuse the other.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

YEARS OF MARVELOUS GROWTH.



The Circulation of THE CANADIAN GROCER has increased one third in the past three months and it has now more than double the circulation among Grocers and General Merchants than that of any other journal in the Dominion. Advertisers make a note of this.

We have been steadily on the march after subscribers for the past five years and our footprints may be traced through every village, town and city from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Thousands of dollars have been spent yearly in the work. We now have our reward in seeing THE CANADIAN GROCER the leading trade journal in Canada.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Jan. 7, 1892.

GROCERIES.

The wholesale houses are now at work upon their stock-sheets, and find little disturbance in the calls of customers to forward goods. The trouble is that customers are not likely for some time to be importunate enough in this particular way. There never is any marked revival before about the middle of the month. The results of the inventories, though not yet completely cast up, do not promise to be exceptional. Most of them appear to agree in assigning to 1891 credit for a considerably greater volume of trade than was done in the previous year, and warrant the belief that the retail stores of the country are in sounder financial health than they were a year ago. On the other hand, the profits do not show up so well, the evidence so far going to show that the chief feature of the trade record of 1891 is the prevalence of cutting. The losses during the year were naturally limited by the restrictive effect of what are still called "the new terms," though they have been in existence for about fifteen months. These make it difficult for a man to fail owing a very large amount to wholesale grocers. Hence dishonesty has played a smaller part in the failures, as a trader whose tactics are to ride for a fall, will not be tempted by the slim chances he has in the grocery business. Thus, the failures, though as numerous as they were a year ago, have tended to purge and tone up rather than weaken the trade, as they were for small amounts for the most part, and weeded out the feeble dealers. The unpaid accounts carried over do not aggregate a larger amount than those of a year ago. The stocks carried in the country are believed to be very light in all staples, so that a good winter's trade is anticipated. There needs to be more money, however. From some quarters the reports come of loans being made to farmers to not maturing interest and mortgages at the close of the old year, farmers preferring to borrow and hold on to their grain.

CANNED GOODS.

The advance which one or two houses contemplated at the beginning of the New Year has not yet been made. There appears to be no material change in the position of vegetables, except that canners are said to be revealing a larger reserve than they were supposed to possess, one canner who claimed to be sold completely out in October having offered 500 cases of assorted goods for instant delivery. It is not believed that the volume of stock held at the canneries is large enough to depress prices below the point they have reached, but its influence appears to be felt against any further advance. Round assorted lots of choice brands are firm at $1.05. There are some inferior brands quoted at $1. A carload of corn and peas was sold on Monday to an outside buyer at equal to $1.05 here. There is negotiation in progress for two or three cars more on outside account, as the result of inquiry developed since the opening of the year. The scarcity of peas is more acute than ever, and a very small stock is held on the spot. Some houses quote $1.10 to $1.15. In fact the shortage that is beginning to be felt on the street has served as a test of the extent of the holdings at the canneries. Jobbers are forced into the position of buyers, but have not operated freely yet. In salmon the trade has not been so intermittent as in former years; a very steady demand has been experienced. The price remains at a basis of $1.40.

The following British Columbia salmon canners have reported their pack in addition to the list published in the "Commercial Journal" of the 17th November: Lowe Inlet Packing Co., Naas River, 8,057 cases; Lulu Island Canning Co., Fraser River, 11,458 cases; Annandale Packing Co., Fraser River, 200 cases; Canoe Pass Cannery, Fraser River, 4,030 cases; British America Cannery, Fraser River, 4,191 cases; Wadham's Cannery, Fraser River, 11,790 cases; Bon Accord Cannery, Fraser River, 8,770 cases; Sea Island Canning Co., Fraser River, 11,240 cases; English's Cannery, Fraser River, 7,824 cases; Laidlaw & Co.'s Sapperton, Fraser River, 6,756 cases; Laidlaw & Co.'s Lulu Island, Fraser River, 6,750 cases; Delta Canning Co., Fraser River, 6,770 cases; Wellington Packing Co., Fraser River, 7,291 cases; Ewen's Cannery, Fraser River, 25,000 cases. Total, 120,127 cases; previously reported, 192,070 cases; grand total, 312,197 cases. There are still a few to be heard from.

COFFEES.

The play of strengthening and weakening influences at primary and leading distributing points hold each other in balance outside The sales here made since last report do not figure up very gratifyingly, as demand has for the most part been kept at rest by supplies bought before holidays. Prices are unchanged at quotations in Prices Current.

DRIED FRUIT.

Though purchases throughout the season were made cautiously by retailers, they were not outrun by the supplies laid in by wholesalers, who bought sparingly on a constantly weakening market. The effect of this is that stocks of '91 fruit are quite light on spot. All the blue fruit, as usual, has gone out. New Valencias are in limited supply. Currants are in very moderate volume. Taken all round, there has been a considerable clearing up of stocks. There was more interpurchasing done this year by houses along the street than usual at the end of December. There is a considerable stock of old Valencias on hand, but with the low prices for new that rule in New York and London, there is little doubt that the holders of old stock will stand to lose something on it. Valencia raisins are quoted from 5¼c. upward. Currants are quiet at from 5¾c.

NUTS.

No element of change has entered into the situation this week, the supply, the demand and the price remaining stationary. Almonds, filberts and walnuts—the seasonable lines—are held in moderate supply. There will not be much doing till present stocks in retail hands are sold off.

RICE AND SPICES.

The leaven of trade is necessary to modify the conditions that held last week, and that influence is lacking. Sales of rice or of spices just now would be surprises to traders. Prices are steady and unchanged.

Says the New York Commercial Bulletin: Considerable curiosity having been excited here by the brief cable announcement of public sales of cloves at Zanzibar, the following details received by mail will be read with interest: "The Zanzibar Government, recently inaugurated by arrangement between H. H. The Sultan and Mr. Gerald Portal, C. B., H. B. M.'s Consul-General, on November 21 introduced its first improvement directly affecting the mercantile business of Zanzibar by holding at 9 a. m. a public sale of cloves belonging to the Government as duty in kind. Mr. Portal addressed the merchants, briefly pointing out that the sale of Government property about to take place, though small in itself, was really most important, as making a new departure in the trading system of Zanzibar. Mr. Portal expressed his firm belief in the practicability of making Zanzibar a great central market for Africa, and in conclusion stated that in a very short time the Government hoped to remove the few remaining restrictions upon trade. The sale was well attended by all European and Indian merchants, and the stock offered was disposed of at fair prices, although heavy purchases for Bombay during the early part of the week somewhat restricted the demand. Pemba quality realized $2.36 to $2.40 per fracila, and Zanzibar (new crop) $2.60. The first sale proved a decided success, and there is no doubt these public auctions, which are henceforth to be held fortnightly, will prove a beneficial change from the plan formerly followed of selling the cloves privately."

SUGAR.

Trade is still stranded in holiday shallows, and until the tide of the demand comes in again things will be at a standstill. The supply is sharing in the off-spell as well as the demand, all the refineries running light except The Canada, which is not running at all, the latter having shut down for a while. The refiners report raws hard to buy. The price of refined went up in New York on Monday and the raw sugar men closed in. The situation appears to increase in strength. Jobbers are evidently of the mind that higher prices will ensue, and that a retailers' demand can be depended on. They show the courage of their convictions, in freer buying at the refineries, several having entered the market and taken large quantities since the opening of the year. It is an indication of assured strength when the refiners refuse to take contracts for forward delivery of round lots at prices ruling to-day for small parcels. The inside price for yellow is now 3 5/8c. Granulated is unchanged at 4 7/8 to 5c. There is no raw now in stock. Activity in the sugar market is looked for on account of the limited supply in the retail stores of the country. Once that activity begins, prices are expected to harden. On Wednesday refiners' prices advanced 1-16c. on yellows, and the feeling in the market is strong.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are uncommonly cheap, plentiful and dull. A very dark grade is obtainable at as low a price as 2c., and that even is susceptible to shading. All varieties are easier and quotations are amended accordingly. There are some United States grades in store that second the effect of cutting between our eastern and western refiners

Molasses calls for no especial comment, as all interest on the part of the demand has for the moment dropped off. The New Orleans crop is reported to be short, almost 40 per cent. below the yield of 1890. Already the meltings are said to be 80,000 barrels below those of '90. Prices are therefore not likely to be lower than they are now, namely, 30 to 50c. per gallon. West Indies are quiet at 35c. in barrels.

TEAS.

The tea market cannot but mend, as sparing purchases have been the rule for a very considerable time. The stocks held here are large and varied, and were bought advantageously for the most part. Values are therefore good, and buyers can replenish supplies now at as favorable prices as ever ruled at the corresponding season in former years. Some interest has already been signified by retailers, and travellers' orders have been larger and more numerous the past few days than they were at any time in December. The range of values begins at 15c. for Congous, 16c. for Young Hysons and 12c. for Japans. The last description is plentiful. There is a very good supply of medium and superior teas of all growths.

MARKET NOTES

In another column appears the advertisement of Messrs. E. Brown & Son, manufacturers of Meltonian blacking, polish and other well known kindred lines, London and Paris Their goods have met with strong favor wherever they have been offered. The firm is about to open an agency in this city.

A new article in grocers' fittings is shown on the week's advertisement of Messrs. Geo. Sparrow & Co., of Colborne St., Toronto, being a counter slicing machine for slicing all kinds of cooked and uncooked meats, canned meats, sausage, etc. It is fitted with a very injenious device for regulating the thickness of the cut, and has a dial showing plainly at what thickness it is working, the guage being divided in sixteenths up to one inch. Messrs. Sparrow & Co., claim for their machine the best workmanship in both knife and woodwork, and guarantee satisfaction in its operation. It is well worth every grocers' attention who needs one to send for their circular.

PETROLEUM.

Prices are at the bottom of the scale and show no tendency to ascend. Business is normal, no special activity in round lots being noticeable.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.31 per bbl.; Oil Springs crude $1.31 per bbl. The past has been another quiet week in the crude oil market. Prices, however, remain unchanged, although an advance of one or two cents without premonitory symptoms, other than those incident to the general situation, would not occasion much surprise. Apropos of the possibilities of the situation there seems to be no disposition to force prices beyond what the legitimate conditions of supply and demand will justify.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Large rolls threaten to accumulate. The supply of stock that comes forward in this form is increasing relatively and absolutely. Choice tubs are wanted. They are becoming rarer and rarer. The price for them is firm at 17 to 18c. For ordinary tubs 15 to 16c. rules, and for seconds the price runs down to 14c. The tendency of large rolls is downward, though 14 to 16c. is going just now. They represent the newly-made, white, turnip flavored butter. Such is rarely put down in tubs, as the market for it is not trustworthy beyond the winter and early spring months, after which yellow butter becomes obtainable. On export account there is nothing doing from this market, the supply being as much to blame for this as the demand, packages suitable for export being so scarce that they are not equal to filling the local demand.

Cheese is quiet. Nothing has occurred to affect the internal market, which continues to yield 10½ to 11c. for prime Septembers.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES.—There is not much strength in the consumptive demand. Shipments on export account are being sent forward by one or two local buyers, who are taking advantage of a recent rise of 1s. in the English market. The price here is $1.75 to $2.75.

BEANS.—Native are dull at $1.20 to $1.30 laid down here in round lots, and are sold out in retailers' lots at $1.30 to $1.40. Lima beans, very clean bright stock, are selling at $5.50 to $6.

CRANBERRIES.—The price is stationary at $7.50 to $8, last week's quotation for barrels. There is a considerable shrinkage noticeable in the supply held here, but this is accompanied by a falling off in the demand that is always the case after holidays.

DRIED APPLES—Country holders appear to be getting stronger ideas as to the value of their stock, and can scarcely be induced to sell, though buyers are freely offering 4c. for round lots. The price here for fair-sized lots is 4½ to 4¾c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—The corner which was supposed to be consummated a few weeks ago brought together a big stock of apples, but there is no report of any sales made by the holders, and as prices abroad do not favor sellers particularly, the thing may not prove so remunerative as it promised. The prices ruling here are 6¾ to 7¼c. for round lots and 8 to 8½c. for smaller parcels.

EGGS—The price of good fresh eggs in cases is firm at 18c. Limed are plentiful and easy at 14c., and some sales have been reported at as low as 12c., the stock being not very acceptable.

GAME—Partridges are plentiful but not in much request at 50c. a brace. Rabbits are a drug on the market at from 10 to 15c.

HIDES—No discernible improvement has been made in the hide market, prices being easy and trade dull. Green quote at 5c. for steers', at 4½c. for No. 1 cows', 3½c. for No. 2, and 2½c. for No. 3. Buffs sell slowly at 5c.

HONEY—A languid demand supplies a slow outlet to the stocks held, which, made up of fair supplies in the hands of several holders, is of considerable volume. The price of extracted is 8 to 10c., and of sections 14 to 16c.

HOPS—The market has not been disturbed by operations of brewers for the past two or three weeks, and the position remains unchanged, Canadian quoting at 18 to 22c., and Bavarian at 40 to 42c.

ONIONS—The demand is easy and stocks are fairly full at $2.25 to $2.50 per barrel for Canadian.

POULTRY—The surplus fowl carried over from the holidays furnishes the bulk of the stock now on hand. Fresh poultry is scarce and but in moderate demand, the strongest call being for spring chickens, which are very hard to get. Turkeys are 7 to 9c., geese 6 to 7c. per lb., fowls and chickens 35 to 55c., and ducks 60 to 70c. per pair.

POTATOES—Buyers are under no pressure to make offers, as they have plenty of stock in store. Cars on track would find slow sale at 40c., and sellers are not ready to take that figure. Out of store lots are sold at 55c.

SEEDS—Alsike has a wide range, the extremes of the scale in price corresponding to inferior and extra choice in quality. The quotations are all the way from $5.50 to $6.50. Red clover is $5 to $5.75. A freer delivery of both classes of seed has been experienced.

SKINS—The price of sheepskins has gone up 5c. farther, the range being now $1 to $1.05. Calfskins are unchanged at 5 to 7c.

TALLOW—There is no change in tallow, which is dull at 5½ to 5¾c. for refined, and 2c. for rough.

WOOL—The dull state of the market shows no sign of mitigation, and 19c. continues to represent outside value for fleeces.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

A check has been given to business by the liberality of the supplies forwarded in the last days of the old year. Buyers and sellers are drifting apart in their ideas of value, the latter holding out quite stiffly and uniformly for $5.50 for cars of selected western. There are plenty of hogs to be had, as the numerous telegraph inquiries prove. These sometimes offer at a quotation and sometimes ask for a bid, but all agree pretty well in ultimately wanting the top price. This firmness has resulted in a stand-off course on the part of packers, and for some days there have practically been no sales made. Anything done has been at $5.25, but the hogs taken at that price do not represent the pick of the market.

BACON—Long clear is quiet and steady at 7¾c., backs at 10c., bellies 10½c., rolls 8½ to 8¾c.

HAMS—An unimportant demand at 10½ to 11c. is all there is to report.

LARD—Pure is fairly active at 9½ to 10c., and compound is dull at 8½ to 9c.

BARREL PORK—has undergone no change, mess being $1.375 and short-cut $15.50 to $16.

FRESH MEATS—A steady seasonable movement is reported, without any new features to speak of. Beef in fore-quarters is 4½ to 5c., in hind quarters 6 to 9c.; mutton is dull at 6 to 7c.; lamb is 7 to 9c.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Oysters are firm at $1.25 per gal., while the trade is exceedingly brisk. There is never an over-supply, as the market is kept at the proper point of supply by telegraphic orders. Dried fish are easy and the demand for salt fish is easily satisfied. Fresh fish are quiet, but in a week or two markets will assume a more decided tone and the fish dealers be kept busier than for months past.

SALT.

Considerable salt has been received this week but the demand is comparatively quiet. Small lots as usual keep moving and the packers are still taking a few large lots, otherwise the demand is easy.

GREEN FRUIT.

A new supply of Valencia oranges has just come in at easier prices, the quotation sinking all the way down to $4, and ranging from that to $5.25. The quality is very good. Floridas are also easier, $2.60 to $3 being the prices ruling now. There is a strong probability that the prices of Floridas will be marked up in the near future, as stocks arrive so wasty, in some cases, as to necessitate re-packing. There are a few Jamaicas at $5,50 to $6. Messina lemons are down as low as $4, but choice specimens go up to $5, the highest point of last week's scale. They are very fine stock. Malaga lemons, in boxes, are easier at $3 to $3.50, and in chests at $6.75 to $7 50. Bananas are scarce at $2 to 2.75 per bunch. Pineapples are out of stock.

DRY GOODS.

What is needed is three or more weeks' sleighing, in order to increase the trade in the country villages and towns. The larger retail houses in the cities had a good Christmas trade, but unfavorable weather has disappointed, somewhat, the country dealers. But there are prospects for better times as the resources of buyers have not been touched as yet. Money is moving none too freely.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Jan. 7, 1892.

The market has not assumed any activity yet after the holidays,but with the snow fall, cold weather, and accompanying country roads, merchants generally anticipate improvement. They contend on this ground that stocks generally in third hands are

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO, Jan. 6, 1891.

The distribution of flour from this centre has been very limited since the opening of the year. No considerable shipments eastward have been made. The demand for cars on both domestic and export account is at a standstill. Local sales, on the other hand, have been more numerous, and city mills have begun the year very promisingly, the run of grocers' and flour dealers' orders being brisker than it usually is immediately after holidays. In feed the movement has been at the best but steady. Certain winter activities in which horses are largely employed have been very dull on account of the lack of snow. Present atmospheric symptoms are more favorable, as the temperature points downward and snow has begun to come. Money is scarce, but better roads and weather, if we are to have them, will help traffic.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are : Manitoba patents, $5.25 ; strong bakers', $4.85 ; Ontario patents, $5 ; straight roller, $4.75 ; extra, $4.10 to $4.15 : low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are : Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.30 to $5.50 ; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.90 to $5.10 ; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90 ; straight roller, $4.10 to $4.15 ; extra, $4 ; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL—Oatmeal is unchanged and selling fairly feely. It is quoted at from $4 to $4.25. Grits and hominy are steady at $4. Cornmeal goes out in car loads at $3.80 to $4, and in small orders at $4.25.

FEED—Bran is more plentiful and easier in value, $16.50 per ton being now the quotation. Shorts are quiet at $18. Mixed feed is in moderate request at $25 for good. Cracked corn is $1.25 per cwt. Corn, as in fact all feed this week, is lower. The price for car lots is 50 to 53c. outside, and 54 to 56c. on spot. Oats are 34 to 34½c. laid down here, and 31 to 32c. outside.

HAY—Timothy is moderately active and in fair supply at $12. Mixed is $10. There are offers in both classes at these figures.

STRAW—The market is rather dull, but all sales of oat are upon a basis of $6 to $6,50.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR.—The snow-fall and cold weather have put holders in a better humor, but the market, as an actual fact, shows little or no change from that reported a week ago. Business was of the merest jobbing kind and prices easy. The stock in store is 3,497 barrels larger than that of a week ago, and 395 bbls. less than that at the same time last year. Patent spring, $5 to $5.35; Patent winter, $5 to $5.25; straight roller, $4.65 to $4.80.

OATMEAL—Is dull and prices are easier than they were a week ago rolled stock been moved at $2.10 and we quote $2 10 to $2.20 for standard, per bag, granulated, $2.20 to $2.30 ; rolled, $2.20 to $2.30.

FEED—The feed market is quiet and unchanged. We quote bran $17 to $18. Shorts $19 to $20, and moullie $25.

ST. JOHN, N.B.,

FLOUR.—We cannot say the market is lifeless, though the quantity moving is very small, and the impresion seems to be that prices will gradually go lower, though present holders of stocks are asking the same figures as a few weeks ago. Manitoba is quoted $5.90 to $6.05, Ontario High grades $5.30 to $5.35, Medium Patents $5.10 to $5.15.

CORN MEAL—There is a but a limited quantity moving, and prices are steady at $3.10 to $3.15. OATMEAL—Without change.

small, and that once the movement commences, the influence of this will be felt in an appreciable way In the meantime there is little to note, but payments don't improve, although they are expected to do so once the farmer commences to move about.

SUGAR.

The demand for refined sugars continued rather slow, grocers evidently having enough on hand for immediate requirements. Refiners though are not pushing business at all, for they contend that once the movement commences, it will be found that stocks in third hands are only light. In the meantime there are few changes to note, while values rule steady to strong, granulated being quoted at 4½c., and yellows at 3½ to 4⅜c.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.

There is only a moderate call for syrups, American moving in a jobbing way at 25c., and domestic 28 to 30c. Molasses has a moderate movement at 36c. for Barbadoes, and 28 to 30c. for New Orleans.

TEAS.

High grade Japan teas have shown some improvement during the week under more enquiry for grades, running at 20c., but business on the whole continues dull yet.

COFFEE.

Stocks of all descriptions of coffee on the market are light, and as a consequence values rule firm. There is practically no Rios in first hands at present, but a shipment is close at hand on which offers of 18 to 19c. are being booked for delivery shortly. Common Jamaicas have been moving at 16c. in a small way.

RICE.

Locally there is absolutely nothing to note in rice and prices are unchanged as follows:—Patna, $4.50 to $5.50; Japan, $4.75 to $5; standard, $30 ; and off grades, $3.50, in car lots. Advices from foreign markets to importers here state that the crop in lower Burmah is estimated 10 to 12½ per cent. short, and that demand is good, while a large business is passing at higher rates.

DRIED FRUIT.

On this market reports of low offers from primary markets do not seem to have had very much effect on holders. The fact is supplies in first hands are not excessive, but of course the report depressed values in Valencia fruit somewhat, but in the absence of business they are nominal. We quote Valencia firsts 5c. and seconds 4⅝c., while there are offers of some off quality at 4½c. Currants for the first time this fall show an easier tendency, but the alteration is not appreciable. Half-barrels and cases are scarce, with prices steady at 5½ to 5¾c. respectively, but barrel stock is more plentiful and 5½c. is certainly an outside figure for a round lot.

CANNED GOODS.

There is no change in canned goods, the demand from jobbers being very small. The general tone of the market is firm, however, and improvement is looked for in the near future. In the meantime prices are purely nominal.

GREEN FRUIT.

The market for green fruit is dull after the holidays, with only a small jobbing trade doing. Valencia oranges move slowly at $4.50 to $4.75, while Florida stocks are in fair demand at $3 to $3.50. Lemons are dull but steady at $3.50 to $3.75, and other lines show no change, and cranberries are quoted at $7 to $7.50, and Almeria grapes at $5 to $5.50 per keg. New figs, in boxes of assorted sizes bring 9 to 11c., and new dates 5½c.

APPLES.

The apple market moves along quietly in a jobbing way and there are no transactions in large lots to report. We quote values $2.50 to $3 for this sort of business. Evaporated and dried descriptions furnish no features.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market remains quiet. Buyers are holding off in anticipation of lower pricesand it is possible that their surmises will prove correct. Owing to the small business or rather absence of business values are nominal. Lard also is very quiet. Canadian short cut, per brl. $14.75 to $15.00; mess pork, western, per brl. $13.50 to $14.00 ; short cut, western, per brl. $16 to $16.25; hams, city cured, per lb. 10⅛c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c; bacon, per lb. 9c. to 10c ; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¾ to 8c.

CHEESE.

Cheese continues firm, but there is no change to report. We note sales in our last of several round lots, and since then a considerable block has been moved at 10⅞ to 11c. from the hands of the same holder.who is reputed to have made a handsome thing on the turn over. We quote values firm for finest at 11 to 11¼c.

BUTTER.

Butter is quiet but steady. Some lines of fall made Townships are offering for shipment around 18c., but to move anything really choice our quotations represent the market. Western dairy is held at 16c. and over, and there has been business for shipment on this basis, creamery is too high priced for any business except in a jobbing way. Late made creamery 24c. ; Finest Townships, 20 to 20½c. ; Finest Western, 16½ to 17½c.

POULTRY.

The market for poultry has fluctuated between dullness and activity according to the weather. Now that we seem likely to have a continued cold spell, holders are feeling better. We quote: Turkeys 9 to 10c., geese 4½ to 6c., ducks 7 to 8c., and chickens 7½ to 8c.

GRAIN.

This market is uninteresting as ever, and if dealers are sincere in what they assert, their offices might as well be closed. Really the market is extremely dull. The stocks in store, compared with those of a week ago show an increase of 26,503 wheat, 108,464 peas, 839 oats, 142 rye, and a decrease of 42,090 barley. Compared with a year ago there is an increase of 78,012 wheat, 138,504 peas, 129,804 barley, and a decrease of 4,667 corn, 90,132 oats, 10,527 rye. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04; peas, 75 to 76c. per 66 pounds; oats, 35c. to 36c. per 34 pounds in store, corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 48 to 50c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Jan. 6, 1892.

GROCERIES.

Trade has been rather quiet the past week, though jobbers usually do not expect much during the holiday season. The markets are steady, and there is nothing to indicate any immediate change in any line of groceries.

SUGARS.—Granulated is quoted 4 to 4½c, Yellows 3½ to 3¾c,

SYRUPS.—The demand is light, with prices unchanged at 2⅞ to 3¼c.

CANNED GOODS.—There is not much movement in canned goods. The retailers have all the stocks they will require for a few weeks. Prices are steady.

RAISINS.—Valencia off-stalk and layers are somewhat easier and selling at 5½ to 6c. Currents are 5¼ to 5½c., with very little selling.

FISH.—The market is without change. A few lots of fresh cod and pollock were placed on the market, but the sale was slow.

PRODUCE.

CHEESE—Is scarce and prices are steady and firm at 10½ to 11c.

BEANS—Hand-picked are quoted at $1.65 to $1.70.

HOW CAN I INCREASE THE PROFITS OF MY BUSINESS.

The writer is personally acquainted with many retailers who can increase the profits of their business as surely as they live, by acting upon the suggestions contained in last week's installment of this subject. Didn't read it, eh? Well, if you can't find the paper, ask your most intelligent clerk to tell you about it and then you will be prepared to consider this installment,

Assuming that the domestic management, which was treated of last week, is a wise and economical one and not susceptable of material improvement we will proceed to the store management. If we find anything wrong here, you will not be able to attribute the cause to your wife or some member or members of your family. If the ministering angels who preside over the destinies of our household affairs present such marked contrasts in the matter of mastering details and economical management, remember that men exhibit the same characteristics and that a lack of order and system which would lead to a neglect of minute details and improvident management would be more disastrous in the management of the store by such a man than it would be in the management of the home by such a woman.

A retail business is made up exclusively of little things, and no man whose head is screwed on his shoulders in such a manner as to confine his scope of vision above the horizon among the stars, thereby making it impossible for him to see the many little things which lie about his feet, should ever invest his money in a retail business. Reader, if you belong to this class, you will not be able to increase the profits of your trade. You have blundered into the wrong pew, and the sooner you get out the better it will be for you. Don't wait until the "money wee s' which make up your "muckle" have all flitted away, but sell out the very first chance you get and place your money somewhere where you can keep you eye on it. But the man who has a joint in his neck and whose eyes are not too far gone to see a little thing can increase his profits by exercising "eternal vigilance" in the manner of treating these minute details. Commence to-morrow morning and see to it that every act and deed affecting value to the extent of one penny shall receive the same careful forethought, and be guided and controlled by the same application of thought and business judgment that would be brought to bear in a transaction involving value to the extent of ten dollars. Do this and you will be surprised at the sudden increase of the profits of your trade. No more will a whole bin full of potatoes freeze solid through neglect to close a window. No more will the wareroom be flooded with the contents of the molasses barrel because you ran to the door to see a dogfight and forgot all about it.

Never, again will you lose the sale of a five dollar pair of fine shoes because you permitted yourself to utter an unkind word in a moment of anger, in reply to a very commonplace and womanly remark on the part of your lady customer. Never again will you neglect to wire that stove-pipe until it falls down and ruins five rolls of butter, a basket of eggs and three dollars' worth of glassware. You will no longer pay delivery clerks for hauling four hundred pounds of boys all over the city, through the mud and sand, for every pound and a half of goods he carries. If some fellow who is a little smarter than you are, has "waxed it to you on a hoss trade," don't wait until the "new hoss" kicks the bottom out of your business, send your unfortunate delivery clerk to his long home, where he will have no further use for his overcoat or mittens, and lands you in the poor-house, but trade him off to the meanest man you know of (I mean the "hoss" not the delivery clerk) and then say you will never again disgrace your family, imperil the life of the poor delivery clerk, or cast reflections on your character as an intelligent business man, by swapping horses. This is absolutely necessary if you wish to increase the profits of your business. Of course, you cannot expect to increase your profits by keeping half-a-dozen boxes of blacking with as many brushes lying about the store for the use of the adjoining townships, or by sacrificing a pair of hose every time you want a "try on" sock. These are small matters, but they denote that the little things and minute details of a concern are neglected. In the aggregate these little things make up the business and they cannot be neglected without neglecting the business to a greater or less extent.

Who of all the thousands of retailers whose eyes will ever glance over this article will endorse its sentiments and general tenor? Not the grocer who keeps wooden plugs in his vinegar and molasses barrels; decorates his front window with spoiled fruit and rotten vegetables; keeps his cookies and doughnuts in a showcase with the top broken out, and allows his cat to nest the tea chest. Such a fellow has no particular use for "The Tradesman," or anything in it, and if he should accidentally read this article or hear someone else read it, he would call it "small potatoes" of the "tweedle dum" variety. If you would step into his store, a very positive odor would meet you more than half way and impress you as being more domestic than foreign. The clerk who receives four dollars per week and boards at home tells you that business is awful dull and that Mr. Loosends, the proprietor, wants to sell out awful bad. Two able-bodied, long-tailed mice run a foot race down one of the shelves for your special entertainment, dodging in and out among the cans of baking powder, knocking over a poor old weather-beaten package of saleratus, and disappearing behind a row of bath-brick. One glance around the store will convince you that the proprietor will soon be out of the business whether he sells out or not. This man is playing a losing game and no one can convince him that incompetency or wilful neglect is the sole cause of the unprofitableness of his business.

Every successful retail merchant will endorse the general drift of this article, for well he knows that unless the greatest diligence be exercised in the management of these insignificant little details, the elements of destruction will fasten themselves upon the very vitality of the business, draining it of its life-sustaining resourses and forcing it into ruin and decay.

So far we have been considering the subject from a sort of house-keeping standpoint. We shall now take up larger matters connected with the transaction of business, and endeavor to point out other ways and means by which the retailer's profits can be augmented.—E. A. Owen, in the Michigan Tradesman.

THE METRIC SYSTEM.

There is an attempted revival in the United States of agitation of the project of a uniform system of weights and measures for all civilized nations. It cannot be said to have attracted a great deal of popular attention as yet, though it is bound to continue to be pressed by progressive men until its final adoption, which is certainly only a question of time. Uniformity in the standards which register amounts and values in the exchanges of commerce is so desirable, and in a more extended system of commerce will be so necessary, that it may be regarded as sure to be ultimately brought about.

Bradstreet's favorably discusses the matter at length, and incidentally brings out many facts of interest in connection with its progress in the United States and elsewhere.

While some of the most important commercial states, as the United States and Great Britain, use one system in their ordinary transactions, they have made another, the metric system, optional, as have some other states, while the great majority of the civilized nations of the world have made the system obligatory. The states which have made the use of the metric system obligatory are Germany, Austria, Hungary, Belgium, the Argentine Republic, France, Italy, Peru, Portugal, Roumania, Servia, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland and Venezuela. The countries which have made the use of the metric system optional are the United States, Great Britain and Turkey, while the system has not yet been legalized in Russia and Denmark. The weight of authority, so to speak, may therefore be said to be in favor of the adoption of the metric system, and it is this system which is most energetically advocated, and with reason, when the project of a uniform system of weights and measures is discussed. The use of the metric system in the United States has been optional for a long time, but its adoption has been confined mainly to governmental departments and scientific bodies.

There are always difficulties in the way of the adoption of a new system of any kind. At the same time the advantages of the metric system are so great that they bid fair to overcome even the force of long habit. The system in the first place is decimal, and has the advantage for purposes of computation that decimal systems have over others based on a different principle. Again, the metric units of length, bulk, weight, etc., are simply related to each other, a circumstance which gives the system a great advantage over the irregularly related or unrelated units of other systems. Finally, the system has become an international one, and intercourse between nations has increased to such an extent that it is now as important to have the same weights and measures used in different countries as it was a century ago to have the same weights and measures used in different parts of the same country.—Manitoba Free Press.

A SUGAR WAR.

Mr. B. T. Rogers, the manager of the B. C. Sugar Refinery, has returned from a trip to the east on business connected with the Refinery. One of the chief objects of his trip was to interview the C. P. R. officials with reference to freight rates in Manitoba. These rates are very high, and Mr. Rogers endeavoured to secure a reduction, but in this he was unsuccessful, the reason assigned being that the greater part of the traffic is from westward to the eastward, and thus cars would have to be taken to Vancouver empty. The eastern refineries are thus enabled to sell sugar at 35 cents a hundred less than the Vancouver refinery can, and these refineries will not maintain prices at living rates, but in order to cut the Vancouver refinery out of the Manitoba trade, they will sell it cheaper in Manitoba than in New York and Montreal or even Halifax. The Intercolonial authorities have recently reduced the rate on raw sugar from Halifax to Montreal from 20 to 18 cents per 100 pounds, so that another advantage is conceded to the eastern refineries. Owing to these reasons the Vancouver refinery will be closed down for a few weeks until the stock on hand is disposed of. —B. C. Commerce and Maritime Register.

IMPORTANCE OF A GOOD CLERK.

It may not be out of place just at the beginning of the new year to remark that a bright clerk who has made himself popular with everybody is one of the most essential things about a grocery store, and in mapping out the plan of action for the next twelve months it is worth while to carefully consider his relations to the success of the business. The fact that there is any number of young men available at any wages the grocer chooses to pay, has a tendency to make him rather careless and independent about his help. While he may devote much time to the management of the store in its various details, it must be admitted that the clerk is really in the position to accomplish much that is essential to success. It is not always the cheapest prices that attract trade. Polite attention with a show of interest in the welfare of every customer holds trade when the competitor on the next corner is making bids for it with cheap prices. If the grocer could hear his clerks discussed in the homes of his customers he would be greatly benefitted and be better able to decide upon the merits of his employes.

With the female portion of the household the grocery clerk is a character that is the subject of frequent comment. If he is a good fellow you may be sure he comes in for a share of their appreciation. Little attentions that men would not notice often win the favor of a woman and retain it so long as they can be distinguished from the commonplaced. Women like to flatter themselves with the idea that they have established their individuality with the clerk, and no matter what station of life they may occupy they are pleased to refer to the special attentions they have received at their grocery. No greater blunder is made by a clerk than that of indifference to any female customer. He may not notice it and the proprietor cannot appreciate it unless it comes directly under his observation, but the customer takes it home and it often makes her say in the family circle or to her neighbor that she does not like so and so at the grocer's because he is too indifferent. A North Side grocer recently found that he had a treasure in a German boy whom he had given work out of sympathy about a year ago. The young man could scarcely master English, but he had long ago mastered the art of being a gentleman. One of the first things he learned was the names of all the lady customers, and it was not long before the proprietor found that a large proportion of his customers were in the habit of calling for "Otto," the young German. Notwithstanding the fact that the proprietor had a number of older and more experienced clerks, Otto was given a regular place behind the counter, and it was not long before the secret of his success fired the other clerks with envy. Otto spoke pleasantly to every woman who entered, calling her by name. Those who gave him their orders were treated as though they were the most important personages in the neighborhood. Suffice to say that the proprietor appreciates his services. He is all that constitutes a good clerk and more besides.

It is poor economy to engage cheap men. Some of the salaries paid to salesmen by Chicago jobbing houses would no doubt open the eyes of country merchants, but they are easily explained. It is not a question of how much the jobber can afford to pay, it is "How much money can you make for us?" They are paid according to their ability. Jobbing houses do not want men who can only sell goods to people who want to buy. In this inventive age a machine could probably be constructed that would answer such purposes. A story is told of a Jew clothing merchant who advertised for a clerk. A young man applied, giving the best reference as to his character. He was asked if he could sell a man a suit of clothes who only wanted a vest. The applicant thought he might make an effort, but he did not know what success he would have. He was sure, however, that he could sell the vest. "You won't do," said the Hebrew. "We want a man who can sell people what they don't want."

The illustration, while not exactly applicable to the grocery business, bears a suggestion. Every grocer ought at least to have one salesman who can do justice to the stock which is profitable to the extent of the rapidity with which it is turned over and who can maintain agreeable relations with the customers.—Chicago Grocer.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2 00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

There are some people who appear to believe that a great change will be wrought in the distributing system of the country by the Patrons of Industry. They have the idea that the mediators between the producer and the consumer will be abolished or reduced in number, and that the primary source of supply will be brought into closer relation with the ultimate demand. Such an opinion of the results of the present agitation to do away with profits is unwarranted. The agitation in question has no constructive object; all that its supporters now aim at is to destroy. They would destroy nine-tenths of the machinery of trade without a thought of the conditions that would be brought upon trade by such a step. They would be entirely unprepared to replace the present distributive apparatus, for the simple reason that they have not given thought to the matter, for if they had given thought to the matter they would leave well enough alone. A system cannot be founded in mere greed, and greed is the sole basis of the movement. In all times there have been large numbers of people who begrudge the living the trader makes. But these people could not devise a system of distribution that would take the place of what we have to-day. The really thinking part of the community have nothing to do with the advocates of reforms that aim at the extinction of the trader. As we said before, the profits of the trade are looked upon by the covetous eyes of the merely greedy, and appeals to that grudging sentiment are frequently and successfully made by sharpers. A month or so ago in this city some adventurers started a consumers' association. They fleeced a few of the natural enemies of the traders and then retired. Their victims are the laughing stock of local retailers to-day.

Do the Patrons of Industry ever look at any other function of the retailer but that which enables him to make a living out of his business? They evidently do not. The work that traders have done is easily contemplated, but there is a disinclination or an inability to regard the traders and that work as cause and effect. We have foreign markets to-day, we have a practically assured outlet for the produce raised by the farmer, we have normal prices, and we would not have had these things in anything like the same degree if merchants had not existed in the proportion in which we have had them. If there had not been enterprise and capital to hold what the producer raised and distribute what the consumer wanted, our condition as a people would have been a very crude one now. How is the single and isolated farmer going to dispose of his grain to single and isolated consumers thousands of miles away? The big operations that have been rendered possible by a mercantile system could not be transacted if the Patrons flourished everywhere and there were no independent traders. For business to be possible upon anything like ideal lines it is necessary that there shall be a body of capital not engaged in production. Distribution is a distinct operation, and it is necessary that it be distinct, as without it the functions of production, and the resources of consumption would not be developed as they are to-day. Distribution has created a market in many cases where mere production could not. The merchants have helped to make the fields of the farmers profitable to them, because the local merchants are part of the distributive system through which the farmers' products find their way to distant consumers. Even the man who sells future wheat when he has not a bushel in possession or under contract, benefits the farmer, for his enterprise is a vehicle of business between the farmer and somebody else. The immense part played by the merchants in building up the commerce which figures up so high in our export and import returns, ought to be thought of when the Patrons suggest that the capital of the merchants shall not be free to expand or shrink under the unfettered direction of the merchant.

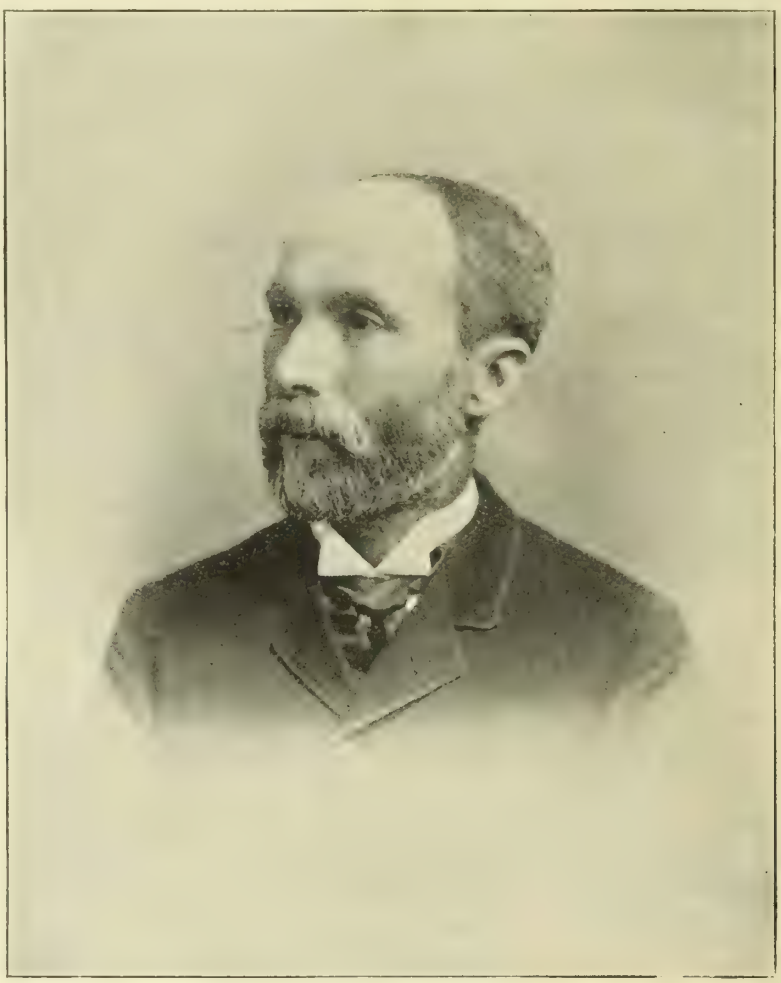
If the Patrons succeed in grafting their organization for a year or two upon the social system of the country, they will begin to realize how helpless they are. They will perceive that the mechanism of trade is a necessary thing even for the accomplishment of their own selfish ends. Already there are symptoms of a reactionary movement upon the dial of progress in districts where the Patrons have obtained a foothold. The movement to do away with toll gates and market fees, that has in recent years been gaining ground in the growing towns and cities, has been arrested wherever the Patrons are strong. This movement has had for its enlightened object the freeing of trade from all local restrictions, that business may be facilitated between the farmers and the city and town people. But in Hamilton, for instance, the disposition among business men to unite to get these municipal taxes thrown off has been chilled by the growth of a Patron sentiment in the surrounding country. Merchants do not feel like exerting themselves for the enfranchisement of trade that is going to only one or two of their number. This is one evidence of the way the Patrons will help along progress. There will be plenty of evidence in actual decay if the Patrons once become supreme.

MEN OF THE TIMES.

MR. J. C. ROSE.

On his bold visage middle age
Had lightly pressed its signet sage.
—SCOTT.

It is interesting and instructive to analyze any instance of great success. The men who have the force to harness Opportunity and press it into the service of their fortunes are the ones whose biographies best serve the cause of progress. There are numberless people in very good commercial positions, the story of whose life would have little moral bearing to make it worth publishing for anybody. Such have simply kept unimproved and unfruitful the talent they were given at the outset. It is those whose power to be useful has been multiplied by their own good husbandry that are entitled to be held up as examples for those who are yet at the foot of the ladder. The child of fortune is a less common phenomenon than many people—particularly disappointed or unsuccessful people—think. We are all given a chance to rough-hew our destiny, no matter though our ends are shaped for us. Ability there must be in the majority of cases where there is success. It is because the perception of true ability is perhaps as rare as ability itself, that there is a popular tendency to assign the credit for this or that man's success to chance, and not to ability. It often requires exceptional ability to avail oneself fully of chance.



MR. J. C. ROSE.

Mr. J. C. Rose is a business man whose career exemplifies the value of a good fundamental basis in character and training as the groundwork of success. Mr. Rose is a member of the firm Caverhill, Rose, Hughes & Co., wholesale grocers, Montreal. He is an Englishman, having been born in the year 1845, at Swalefield House, Yorkshire. Only in the matter of birth may Mr. Rose be regarded as an Englishman, for he was reared from childhood, educated and all but trained in this country. He was only three years old when his parents left the old country and came to Canada. He has been immersed in Canadian mercantile activities from his youth up. His family chose Hamilton as their place of residence when they first came to the country, but shortly afterwards moved to Toronto. When Mr. Rose was 16 years old, his uncle—a Mr. Collet—who carried on a grocery business in Northallerton, Yorkshire, offered to give the youth a start in life by bringing him up to the trade. This opportunity was accepted, the young man returned to his native land and entered into a five years' apprenticeship in the store of his uncle. The uncle turned out to be a strict employer, not an indulgent relative. The apprenticeship had nothing nominal about it; the young learner had to render hard end exact service. The motto that was to be most respected in that shop was, "Learn first to do a thing well, next to do it quickly." Thoroughness and despatch were well ingrained into the habits of the apprentice, and he owes much to the severe principles inculcated and practised in his uncle's grocery. It would be a great thing for the Canadian grocery trade if it had more men who were trained in the school that Mr. Rose was. The position of that trade to-day would be much more satisfactory than it is. The apprentice system produced few carpet-knights of trade, and it is the worse for trade that the excellences of that system had to be let go of with its drawbacks. When Mr. Rose returned to Canada he accepted a situation with James Berwick, who at that time was in the grocery business on East Market street, in this city. From Berwick's he went to Dodgson, Shields & Co.—afterwards James Shields & Co.—in whose retail department he worked for two years. From there he graduated to the wholesale department of the same grocery house. In this connection he began his career as a traveller, taking the ground north and west of Toronto. In 1876 he entered the employment of Mr. J. C. Fitch, then in the stand now occupied by Messrs. Davidson & Hay, in this city. After being in this position for some time an opening presented itself upon the travelling staff of Messrs. James Turner & Co., wholesale grocers, Hamilton. His ability was so clearly demonstrated in this situation that he was offered a partnership in the branch of that firm's business which in 1881 was started in Montreal. This opportunity was embraced, and the Montreal offshoot started under the style Turner, Rose & Co., Mr. Rose's duties being to do the buying and to look after the travellers. In time the branch developed into an independent house, doing an immense business. Last summer the fusion of this firm with that of Caverhill, Hughes & Co., also of Montreal, combined the assemblage of business talent and financial strength that is now flourishing under the style Caverhill, Rose, Hughes & Co. Since these two houses have gone double the trade that has flowed through their joint connections has been a huge one and is still growing. In both Ontario and Quebec, as well as in remoter provinces, they have built up a strong business upon their reputation as honorable traders and upon the strength of personal relations with the trade, relations established while on the road by Mr. Rose and Mr. Hughes. The range of distribution covered by this firm extends from Halifax to Winnipeg. A practical man knows what value to place on travellers, and Mr. Rose makes it a point to select the very best men to be got hold of. He is successful in getting good men. He studies carefully the requirements of the trade and is a hard worker. These are elements of success in themselves, which are not incapable of supporting the biggest superstructure of achievement that a man can rear.

RECUSANT TRAVELLERS.

It is reported that the provisions recently adopted by the Guild to ensure the observance of the sugar agreement are not found easy of application. This may be owing to mere tardiness or it may be owing to contumaciousness. The oath, it appears, has not been administered to travellers of some of the houses. In one or two individual cases the cause is alleged to be conscientious scruples. Whatever it is, it is at all events a temporary obstacle to the adoption of a boiler-plated arrangement. If it turns out to be a permanent obstacle, it will show that the houses who employ the recusants think more of their travellers than they do of the Guild, or think more of the liberty the travellers stand out for than they do of the Guild. It is possible that a traveller may object on principle to binding himself by an oath to observe certain restrictions as to price. It is very probable, also, that such a traveller, being a man with convictions and having the courage of them, is a faithful and valued employe whom his firm would be unwilling to part with. There may be also an alternative and probably collateral reason for the deadlock, in the fact that the principals covertly oppose the new arrangement through their travellers while openly acquiescing in it. This would be unworthy of any candid house.

Whatever is the real cause of the difficulty the nominal cause is the objection the travellers have to taking the affidavit. This might have been foreseen. The travellers are entitled to consideration. They have principles and they have influence, and probably enough of both to prevent the establishment of the new order. In some cases also they can be used as the scapegoat, made to bear the responsibility of a hitch which practically nullifies the arrangement, but in those cases they will not lose their position. It is noticeable that loyalty to the Guild on the part of the house, on the one hand, and loyalty to liberty of action on the part of the traveller, on the other hand, have not led to any travellers being discharged. The new arrangement is unable to rouse a sufficient fervor of fidelity in the breasts of some who have approved it. If it were, there would be no need for it, but opposition must be expected from those it was intended to bridle.

It is unfortunate that the retail trade can not have some assurance that there is no inequality in the way they are treated by the wholesalers. An agreement upon any line that is notoriously cut is a good thing for the retailer, but open prices are a long way better than an agreement that is but a mockery. Though the Guild has been in existence for some years, and though its members appear to be a unit in everything but prices they are pledged to agree upon, it is nevertheless a fact that favors have been dispensed in violation of other cardinal principles professed by it. Nothing appeared to be more rigid than the terms relating to time and discounts, and favored buyers have been exempted from the letter and spirit of both. There has been a latitude of liberty exercised in these matters that cannot but perplex, when it is considered that the strongest restraints of honor are supposed to hold a man from taking any liberty.

EARLY CLOSING IN HALIFAX.

The Halifax Retail Grocers' Association evidently believes that an evil, to be got rid of, must be encountered with more than a formal resolution. Unanimous resolutions have been launched at a great many of the abuses and annoyances of the trade, but these utterances are innocuous, if not supported by energetic action. The Halifax grocers concluded that late hours were a waste of time and bodily strength. They passed a resolution condemning them and then began a vigorous campaign to abolish them. They have met with the reasonable success that goes to those who really try. At a meeting of the Halifax Retail Grocers' Association, held on Nov. 2nd, the following resolution was adopted: That a committee be appointed to ascertain and report at the next monthly meeting what number of retail grocers and other retailers in the city will approve of closing their respective places of business at 8 p.m. on all evenings excepting Fridays and Saturdays, commencing on January 1st, 1892. Thus time was taken by the forelock. The year 1892 was desired to be one of limited hours of service, and preparations were commenced as early as the first of November for beginning it right. The issue of this seasonable care was encouraging. The whole ground was thoroughly beaten by canvassers for signatures to the early closing agreement, and when the new year opened 49 grocers and 134 other retail merchants had agreed to close at 8 o'clock on all evenings except Fridays and Saturdays throughout 1892.

The departure was approved by the public, many of the leading consumers co-operating with the traders, the former promising to abstain from shopping after the hour named as the closing one, so that those who remain open will not be encouraged to continue doing so. The Trade and Labor Council of Halifax gave its support to the movement by the following resolution :

"Whereas, a committee from the Retail Grocers' Association has for some time been endeavoring to have the different establishments in the city to close at 8 o'clock on all evenings except Friday and Saturday, by so doing giving themselves and employes a better chance for exercise and rest, instead of being compelled to remain in the stores for 12 or 14 hours a day to serve customers, whose goods could be ordered before 8 o'clock ;

Therefore be it resolved, that the members of this Trade and Labor Council, representing the different trade and labor associations, request their members at their next meetings to instruct their wives, mothers and sisters to purchase their household necessaries during the day and before the hour of 8 o'clock in the evenings from the stores where the proprietors have signed a petition to close, and pass the doors of those who are opened after that hour, thus preventing their employes from enjoying the privileges of shorter hours of labor that we now so beneficially enjoy ; and that the secretary of the council be instructed to write the different associations to the above effect.

The success of the appeal to the retailers of the city may have been due in some measure to the moderation of it. The Grocers' Association did not ask much. It made the hour of closing 8 o'clock, which instead of being an early closing hour is really a compromise between the early and late closing trader. It was very well to start out with an accommodation, as, that would be more likely to catch extremists on both sides and would be certain to secure all moderate men. This would be a good means of introducing a greater measure of the same principle at some later date, as once an experience of even an imperfect early closing agreement was had, there would be a disposition to try an earlier hour afterwards. If there was a little more of the zeal as well as of the diplomacy of the Halifax grocers shown in other cities there would be a more general prevalence of early closing.

A NEW NAIL LIST.

The general store trade will be interested in the change that has recently been made in the prices of nails. The manufacturers have formed a combine upon very strong lines, and agreed to adopt the American list as the form in which we quote. Prices had been cut to a ruinously low figure for the past year, during the greater part of which the makers were apart, their former combine having dissolved. The following is the present list for cut nails :

(1.) EITHER CANADA OR AMERICAN PATTERN.

Basis—50 to 60 dy.	nails,	$2 30.
40 dy.	"	5c. more.
30 dy.	"	10c. "
20, 16 & 12 dy.	"	15c. "
10 dy.	"	20c. "
8 & 9 dy.	"	25c. "
6 & 7 dy.	"	40c. "
5 dy.	"	60c. "

(2.) AMERICAN PATTERN ONLY.

4 dy.	nails (shingle),	60c. more.
3 dy "	(lath),	$1.00 "

(3.) CANADA PATTERN ONLY.

4 dy.	nails (shingle),	50c. more.
3 dy. "	(lath),	90c. "

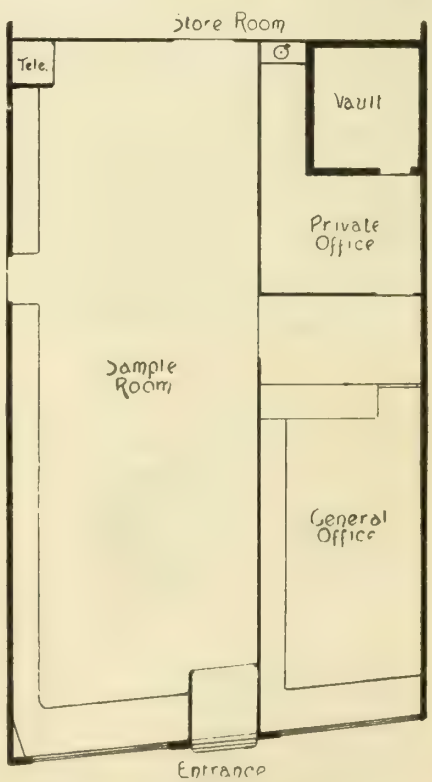
Steel nails are to be quoted from a basis 10c. higher, that is from $2.40, the additions for the various sizes being the same as those above.

MESSRS. T. KINNEAR & CO'S NEW WAREHOUSE.

In its new quarters at No. 49 Front St. east, the business of Messrs. T. Kinnear & Co., wholesale grocers, is now completely domiciled. An air of peace and faultless order, giving no hint of the turmoil of moving and settling or the hurly-burly of the annual stock-taking, pervades the premises. The whole effect is well calculated to invite notice, and the time is opportune for it to receive some notice from THE GROCER. For eleven years T. Kinnear & Co. carried on business one door west of where they are now. They would probably have been at No. 47 yet if they had not been crowded out of it by the sheer expansion of their trade. For the past two years the need of a larger stage for their extensive operations was manifest to them, and they were on the look-out for a suitable building. No. 49 became vacant, six months ago they bought it, and now they are occupying it.

The new premises are spacious. They have a frontage of 36½ feet and they run back 181 feet and are four storeys high in the main part. They are also conveniently situated. Fronting the principal commercial street of the city, they are backed by a wood-paved lane of ample width for handling freight easily. The disposition of the space and the equipment of the interior are on a par with the commodiousness and convenient location of the premises. Two doors open upon Front St., one into the sample room, the other into a wide corridor, whose whole length is traversed by a truck-track running into the warehouse. This makes an exceedingly convenient front outlet or inlet for freight, and shipping is facilitated by an extension that brings the track to the verge of the pavement level with the dray. To the right of this passage into the shipping department are the sample room and offices. These are very tastefully appointed and laid out. The wood-work is beautiful, the whole being finished in cherry. A feature of the sample rooms and office that strikes the attention at once, is the abundance of light that is admitted into the front rooms. The very finest plate glass forms a material portion of the partitions that separate the rooms, and a beautiful setting is given to this by the polished cherry casements. The sample room as well as the offices is elegantly furnished. The shelves in the former are surrounded by glazed work that throws further light from the corridor. In the rear of the offices are the lavatory and vault. At the back of all extends the ample storage area of the first floor. Here everything is planned for despatch and convenience. In the upper storeys everything is equally ship-shape. On those floors are the bonded ware houses, both customs and excise, though a bonded chamber is also divided off from the rest of the basement. An hydraulic hoist runs from the basement to the top floor. The offices and sample room are lighted by electricity, the remainder of the building by gas. The building is strong, spacious, well laid out, well fitted up and could have no better facilities for the handling of a large stock. Messrs. Kinnear & Co. can now handle a much larger stock, keep a larger staff and do business on a much larger scale than ever before.

INTERIOR OF SAMPLE ROOM.



PLAN OF FIRST FLOOR.

With one of the best equipped houses in the city this successful firm cannot fail to enlarge their business, which is already of dimensions creditable to its eleven years of growth. Seven travellers are kept constantly on the road and ten men are employed inside. The firm keep their own teams to do their city business and customers can always depend on prompt delivery. The business is personally supervised by Mr. Kinnear himself, who has had twenty years of experience in the trade, as retailer traveller, and wholesaler. He is in a position therefore to know the wants of the trade, to whom he extends an invitation to visit him in his new premises.

PRACTISE WHAT THE PATRONS PROFESS.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER:

SIR,—Every movement whether right or wrong, may be turned into an object lesson either to those who are participants or to those against whom it is directed. Let us then briefly note one or two lessons which the trade can learn from the Patron movement

The eagerness with which farmers embraced the organization against the trader, should teach and convince him that organization on his part is not an idle dream, but a matter of necessity and self-preservation. Let every merchant take this matter into his "most serious consideration."

Paying cash being one of the underlying principles of the movement, should not the merchant, encouraged by its success, strike out boldly to curtail credits? If farmers are so ready to join the movement they can and should be asked to practise what they preach.

I should be pleased to see the subject thoroughly handled through your valuable paper, by the trade generally.

THE HALIBUT FISHERIES.

For some time past the winter quarters of the halibut have been a mystery, which many have endeavored to solve. About this time last year the B. C. Deep Sea Fishing Company sent out a vessel, but were unsuccessful in discovering the haunts of this toothsome fish. This year the B. C. Fishing and Trading Company have been fishing regularly, but about three weeks ago the halibut disappeared and they have been unable to trace them. On Tuesday evening the steamer Eliza Edwards left this port to endeavor to trace the fish, and she may probably be more successful, being an excellent sea boat with sufficient strength to withstand the storms of the North Pacific Ocean. It is supposed that the halibut remain during the winter in the coves of the Queen Charlotte Islands and in the northern inlets of British Columbia. The steamer is provisioned for one month and will probably stay out that period, and efforts will be made to discover the breeding grounds of the fish. Her owners have gone to considerable expense in fitting her out, and she has all the necessary appliances for fishing in deep waters. The demand for this fish in eastern Canada and the United States has largely increased of late, and with the splendid facilities for shipment offered by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, it should become one of the chief industries of Vancouver when once the waters frequented by the fish are discovered. As this is a matter which is of the most vital importance to the whole Province, the Government would do well to take the matter up, and in all probability representations to this effect will be made shortly —B.C., Commerce.

AN IDEAL BUSINESS MAN.

A business man is a vision of every day, but among those that we meet so frequently there are so few of the really succestful ones that one is tempted to remark, we need some pattern from which to model our future business men. Now let me tell you of my ideal business man :

You may imagine his, one of any of the firm faces which, while including the possibility of expressing kindness and even joviality, positively excludes from its expression all semblance to harshness.

His dress may be plain without being gaudy ; rich without being extravagant ; but let there be a nicety pervading his apparel, from his hat to the gloss of his boots.

We will now enter his office and observe him at his work. The furniture must be in order ; and, however plain, the fittings of the office must be neat. As he enters let us notice that each clerk pays him a dutiful homage, with a pleased expression, and goes on with his work with an attention secured through love of the work. This will denote that kindness and deference have been used in dealing with his inferiors.

He is honest, truthful, prompt, systematic, attentive to small things, punctual in payment, firm in collection (but willing, if needs be, to tide a friend over) orderly, polite, watchful, slow to decide, but quick to act, never narrow or inconsiderate.

Honesty he feels is the basis upon which all true business must stand. Upon his neighbor's honesty he depends (without trusting to it) as well as his neighbor relies upon his honesty. Truthfulness, that essence of honesty, which precedes the exchange of money or goods, is of absolute necessity to proper transaction of business. What he agrees to do he feels he must do, and in order to be faithful in this matter he must have a certain system which will not admit of the omission of a single act, backed up by his word, or that of his neighbor.

Upon this thorough basis of honesty, truthfulness, system, he builds his sympathies for his friends in business.

Kindness he knows to be what he loves best. Kindness draws kindness, which is love, which is sympathy. As he feels, he admits that others may feel ; and does unto no man what he would not have done unto him.

These things he carries out himself and exacts in others because he knows them to be right.

But because he is just, honest, etc., he does not admit that all men are so. Without being narrow, his idea of system prompts him to require that all business transactions should be done in a business-like manner, namely : that there be no loop holes which the dishonest may seize to do him injustice.

We have said that he is slow to decide. We do not mean that he should allow golden opportunities to pass ; but, that applying the learning of these essential elements of successful business in their relation to transaction, requires time ; and, arrived at his decision, he acts with a promptitude urged by the security of his position.

Any of these mentioned above could be dwelt upon at great length by entering into detail ; but it is not our idea to tell you in detail what the ideal business man is, but to place before the reader those elements which he will admit to be essential. He may add unto these, but will withhold none of them. Nor do we claim that through these means the business man will acquire great wealth, but to effect this, he will accomplish the great aim of a true business man, namely : to float to the end of his life with a name untarnished, and friends on all sides who will refer to the old sign with pleasure and unbroken faith.—Max in Kingston Kicker.

PRACTICAL WINDOW DRESSING.

"Nearly 300 Ways to Dress Show Windows" is a work that ought to do a great deal of good. It has a wide scope of usefulness, and the matter of the book shows that its author is conscious of the extent of the field that is yet to be covered by clear and tasteful ideas on the subject of window dressing. The importance of such a work in a shopkeeper's education cannot but be very great. The work is liberally illustrated, the letter-press is very full and plain in its hints, and there is no stereotyped device in the 236 pages of the book. The trade should have it. It is published by Harry Harman, window dresser and decorator, P. O. Box 113, Louisville, Ky.

The vest pocket silicate slate which the Monetary Times sends out as a souvenir of the 25th year of its publication is a handsome and serviceable memento of the occasion. It is just the thing for a business man, who seldom charges his pocket note-book with more than a transient entry, and for whom on that account a folio is as good as a hundred pages. The slate is in fact better, as it reminds a man, as well, that he must either record in a more permanent medium or otherwise dispose of the matter noted, for the space must be cleared for new items. Important things are apt to be submerged in a lot of leaves when noted in a voluminous book. On the inside surfaces of the cover are a few Don'ts that a business man cannot too often look over. We thank our contemporary for including us in the list of those to whom the Souvenir is sent.

TORONTO RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The first meeting for the new year, of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association was held on Monday night, in the Association's rooms in Richmond Hall. The following members assembled : Messrs. Booth, Clark, Mills, White, Gibson, Butcher, McCulloch, Johnson, Lindsey, Barron, Saunders, Radcliffe, Sykes, Westren, Sinclair, Stewart, and Mulqueen.

The chair was taken by President Booth, and the proceedings opened at 5 minutes to 9 o'clock.

Mr. Mills, secretary pro tem., read the minutes of last meeting, which, upon the motion of Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Gibson, were confirmed.

The officers' roll-call found the Treasurer, and Mr. Roberts, and Mr. Westren, members of the Executive Committee, absent. Mr. Westren came in a little later.

REPORT OF THE EXECUTIVE.

The acting secretary read the report of the Executive Committee upon the appointment of a secretary. The report recommended that the position be kept open till the evening of the present meeting, that the salary be $100, that 50 per cent of the membership fees collected from any excess over 90 members go to the secretary, that the salary be paid quarterly, that the secretary's dismissal be at the option of the Association at the end of any quarter, that he visit the members every quarter, that he render an account of all fees received at the end of every month, and amount of such fees in arrears.

This report was received, and upon the motion of Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. McCulloch, the discussion of it was postponed till a later stage of the proceedings, in order to give any person who might be late in arriving a chance to join in it.

THE AT HOME REPORT.

Mr. Mills presented the report of the At Home committee. It had met on the 5th inst. It recommended that the At Home be held in Webb's parlors on the evening of the 28th inst., that the price of double tickets be $1.75, extra ladies' tickets 60c., and assigned committees their duties by the following arrangement : Printing—Mr. Mills ; Music—Messrs. Gibson, Mulqueen, Stewart, Westren ; Refreshments—Mr. Gibson ; Concert programme—Messrs. Barron, Booth, and McCulloch. The limit of outlay for music was fixed at $25, for the concert $50. The issue of complimentary tickets was recommended to be restricted to the Mayor, THE GROCER, the Merchant, the President and Secretary of the City Travellers' Association, and the same officers of the Bakers' Association. The number of tickets recommended to be printed is the same as was printed last year.

It was moved by Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Mills, that this report be adopted, and that tickets be given to members for sale. - Carried.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The secretary had answered one or two communications relative to inquiries for information to start associations outside.

A letter from Stratford asking what course should be taken with tea peddlers, who paid no license, was also reported as answered.

ACCOUNTS.

Some small accounts due for printing Christmas notices of the association's intention to give no presents, were brought in, as also one for printing notices of this meeting They were passed and ordered to be paid.

THE SECRETARYSHIP.

Upon motion of Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Sinclair, the report relating to the secretaryship was adopted.

Applications were read, first, from R. M. Corrie, 137 Gerrard street east, who stated that he covered the city in his travels every week ; second, from Arthur Jones, of Jones & Westren. Mr. Mills explained that he had a verbal intimation from Mr. Thackray that he would be willing to serve again. Mr. Corrie, it was stated, travelled for D. Williams & Co.

Mr. Barron moved that Mr. Jones be secretary. This was seconded by Mr. Radcliffe.

Mr. Johnson, seconded by Mr. Butcher, moved in amendment that Mr. Thackray receive the appointment.

Mr. Gibson moved in amendment to the amendment that Mr. Corrie be the man. This was seconded by Mr. Saunders.

Mr. Radcliffe felt that no commercial traveller should be appointed. It gave one traveller a pull over the rest of the travellers.

A ballot was taken, which resulted in the election of Mr. Corrie by a vote of 11 against 6, a second ballot being necessitated, as no one had a majority of all the votes in the first, Mr. Thackray's name dropping out on the first.

Upon the motion of Mr. Barron, seconded by Mr. Johnson, the election was made unanimous.

Mr. Gibson offered himself as bondsman for the new secretary for whatever amount might be required.

Mr. Clark moved that Mr. Corrie be notified of his election, and that the Executive Committee consider what bonds he shall give. Mr. Barron seconded, and the resolution was passed.

THE CONVENTION QUESTIONS.

The sixteen questions drafted at the meeting of the delegates held here in the fall were distributed among the members. The discussion began upon the first question :

What is the feeling of your Association on the time terms as last put in force by the Wholesale Grocers' Guild.

Mr. Gibson considered it a great injustice to cut down the time from 60 to 30 days on sugar and to reduce the time for cash discount to 10 days. He approved the change from 4 to 3 months on general groceries. Four months he believed to be too long, it tended to encumber a man with dead stock if the time between purchase and payment were unduly long. A trader can better meet his payments if but reasonable time is given. On the four months time a grocer very commonly bought twice as much tea as he wanted, so that when payment was due he had not realized upon all the stock. Of course tea can still be bought on four months time, but it is not what can be done, but what is prescribed that the Association had to consider. The wholesale houses do not get the big orders they used to get ; their business is now a matter of supplying parcels to keep stocks sorted up, so that the effect of the terms is hard on the wholesalers themselves. So far as the letter of the time terms was concerned, he knew it was not strictly observed, as supply stores, maintained by wholesale houses, had been allowed renewals at a less rate of interest than if they were under a chattel mortgage. The terms were in this way hardest on the cash buyer.

The question as to whether the terms were always literally carried out led to an informal vote, not called from the chair, in which but one man stood up to answer No to the question, How many grocers present have received no favors from the Guild, in violation of professed Guild principles ?

Upon the motion of Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Johnson, the following answer was returned to the first question : We believe the Guild's time terms to be detrimental to trade.

Question 2 then came up for consideration, It asked, What is the feeling of your Association as to the sliding scale of prices on quantities of starches, sugar, and various other goods as enforced by the Guild ?

Mr. Gibson moved that the following answer be made : The limit to obtain the extra ⅛c. per lb. on granulated sugar should be 5 barrels instead of 15 barrels ; that 20 boxes of starch instead of 50 should be made the basis on which the 5 per cent trade discount is given. Mr. Western seconded.

Speaking to the motion, Mr. Gibson said that in the present money stringency it was unfair to oblige a man to take 15 barrels in order to obtain the extra ⅛c. It was difficult to get a hold of enough money to get the advantage conceded with quantities. Also he did not believe in loading any man down with starch. Twenty boxes ought to be the outside quantity.

The motion was carried.

Mr. Radcliffe thought the present discussion a very good occasion to recall to mind that a resolution had been passed some time ago, binding the association to buy but one make of sugar. He thought that resolution should be strictly carried out. The association should declare its purpose to buy only the best sugar.

Mr. Butcher supposed that the resolution referred to was being carried out. He had always acted upon it except during the summer, when sugar of any kind was very hard to get.

Mr. Mills said the sugar resolution had been virtually suspended in summer, owing to the great shortage in the supply. But he believed that the granulated of the St. Lawrence refinery should be used solely, as by confining themselves to trade in that sugar the grocers could raise the standard of quality, which had been going down very perceptibly lately. The quality can be kept up, if the monopoly can not be broken,by an agreement among the grocers to use only the best, viz., the granulated of the St. Lawrence refinery. At present, the refiners feel that the trade must take what is given them.

Mr. Barron would revive the resolution, and have each member pledge himself to use only St. Lawrence granulated when it is possible to get it.

Mr. Gibson said that yellow sugar should be included in the resolution. Redpath's yellow he declared was at the bottom of the barrels, like tutti frutti chewing gum. Loss was suffered in handling it, especially if weighed out by juniors, as it would stick to the scales, and stick to the barrels, so that fully one and a half per cent. of it was lost.

Mr. Mills, experience of Redpath's sugar was not more satisfactory than Mr. Gibsons.

The discussion of the questions was then proceeded with. The third question, Would you be in favor of the following terms on sugars and syrups: 45 days, with 1½ per cent. discount for cash in 15 days, all other goods 3 months, with 3 per cent. discount for cash in 15 days?

Upon the motion of Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Barron, the answer returned to this question was Yes.

As the hour was late, as a meeting of the At Home committee was to be held after the adjournment of this, as the discussion of the questions so far had proceeded very slowly, and as it was deemed advisable not to go too hurriedly through the rest of them, it was moved by Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Radcliffe, that the further consideration of the questions be postponed till the next meeting. Carried.

THE SUGAR RESOLUTION.

The question of committing the Association to a particular make of granulated sugar was then returned to. After some further discussion, wherein it was shown that the difference between the resolution some months ago adopted upon this matter and the resolution now in view was, that the former was calculated to break the monoply while the present sought to raise the standard of quality, the following, moved by Mr. Barron, seconded by Mr. Radcliffe, was passed:

Inasmuch as under the present Guild combination some of the refiners are manufacturing granulated sugar of inferior quality; in order to mark our disapproval of this we hereby recommend members of the Association and the grocery trade, to support the St. Lawrence sugar refinery only, as in our estimation its sugars are the best on the market at the present time.

Mr. Radcliffe said the refineries would fill an order from any retailer at the prices charged by the wholesalers.

The meeting then adjourned.

THE AT HOME COMMITTEE.

The At Home Committee then assembled, with Vice-President Clark in the chair. The reports of the various sub-committees were presented, showing progress in printing, arrangements for refreshments, music, etc. The concert programme was referred back to the sub-committee in charge of it, which has under consideration an offer from Mr. R. L. Corrie to put a programme on.

Messrs. Gibson, Butcher and Barron were named a committee to wait on the wholesale trade with tickets for the At Home.

The committee then adjourned.

OTTAWA LETTER.

The agitation which ended in the adoption of an early closing hour by the dry goods merchants here is now being carried on amongst retail grocers. The hour is to be 7 o'clock. We wish them success.

In your last issue you quote Judge Ross' remarks re dishonest civil servants. You approve of these remarks; so do we, and hope they will have the effect the learned judge so desires—make these people live within their means and pay their honest debts. The amount due the trading people of this city by government officials is almost incredibly large. They owe to everybody. There are many noble exceptions, but the majority are not trustworthy. You suggest going to headquarters. This course has often been tried, and almost as often failed. The employes have the ear of their superiors and they use it to their advantage. They make promises, but seldom carry them out. They also have the law to protect them and we are at their mercy.

The Ottawa Canning Co's pack of tomatoes this year was very large, and the goods are turning out to be first-class. I understand they have about 2,800 cases in stock yet.

Messrs. Baskerville & Bros' storehouse and bonded warehouse, which were destroyed by fire some time ago, have been rebuilt, and are now ready for occupation. It is a substantial two-story stone building, 200 feet long by 33 feet in width, and will be a great boon to the occupants.

Fire has almost destroyed the town of Lachute, a thriving manufacturing centre, 60 miles from Montreal.

A fire broke out among some rags in the attic of John Eustice's grocery Hamilton on Monday. Little damage was done.

The Patrons of Industry are canvassing the riding of East Elgin to get the farmers' opinion of bringing out a candidate for the House of Commons in the coming election.

A fire on Wednesday in Thorold, Ont., destroyed John Cloy's grocery store. His loss on the building was $8,000 insured for $4,000; loss on stock $7,000, insured for $3,000. Two neighboring stores were destroyed.

At a largely attended meeting of the Montreal Grocers' Association, held in the Mechanics' institute one night last week it was decided to hold a grand drive, sometime between the 1st and 15th of February. Details were left to a committee to look after, who will fix the date and arrange the route and rendezvous.

One of Leamington's business men left nearly $1,000 under his pillow at the Luck House, where it was found by one of the chambermaids, a Miss Hastings, who gave it to her employer. The owner in the meantime had missed it, and wired to Mr. Luck. When he got it he said "Thank you" to the honest girl.

The Retail Grocers' Association of Hamilton have elected the following officers: John Ronan, president; B. Winnifreth, first vice-president; H. Taylor, second vice-president; Charles Bremner, treasurer; William Harvey, secretary; executive committee, John O. Carpenter, C. H. Peebles, J. F. Kavanagh, Adam Ballentine, James Main, George Hunt and R. C. Cooper; auditors, Cyrus King and W. H. McLaren.

The employes of Eby, Blain & Co. have been organized by Captain Bennett into a hockey club. Already an admission of their prowess has been wrung from antagonists, but not on the ice. The Ontario Bank hockey club was challenged, accepted, but finally backed out. A victory has therefore been scored by Captain Bennett's team, a victory by default it is true, but nevertheless a glorious victory. The conquerors are now ready for all comers.

The Patrons of Industry are looking for a grocer to sell them at the usual discount in London, but so far have failed. The London grocers are a level-headed lot, and know what it costs to do business. The Patrons also called on the London Brush Mfg Co., and wanted brushes at ten per cent. advance on cost of manufacture. The average Patron does not use 50c. worth of brushes in a year, and it is not very fair to the grocer who gives him per contract goods at 12 per cent. advance, for brushes belong to a grocer's stock.

The early closing law has gone into effect in Grand Forks.

A. & L. Cameron, general merchants at Beachburg and Cobden, Ont., have assigned. The business is continued by Archibald Cameron under the style A. Cameron & Co.

Louis Wigle has been continued in the management of S. Wigle & Son, the Leamington firm which failed for over $100,000, and whose assets were sold to realize 20 cents on the dollar.

We understand that Messrs. L. Chaput, Fils & Cie., wholesale grocers, of Montreal, have secured the services of Mr. C. H. Lewis, of Belleville, who is well known to business men from Kingston to Toronto, and all through the midland district.

The successful tenderers for supplying the provincial gaol at New Westminster, B.C., Jan. 5, are as follows: Groceries, James D. Rae; meat and vegetables, W. W. Dickinson; bread, Attanasse. The tenders for fish were not accepted, as they were considered too high.

SUPPLY STORES.

It is asserted now and then that there are certain jobbers in this city (whose names I have not heard) who make it a business to set up and support in business dealers who establish themselves in neighborhoods where these jobbers do not sell to the dealers already established. I do not know how true this statement is, but there can not, on the face of matters, be very much of this sort of work done, for the reason that it would come quite soon to the knowledge of rival jobbers; and then where would the sugar agreement be? As this agreement is practically unviolated in this city, one would suppose that the practice of establishing retailers under the wing of the jobber cannot be very extensively practised. "The National Grocer" would be glad to spread before its readers any facts which are in the possession of the retail trade, and I hope that any retail grocer, knowing of such arrangements, will make it known to the writer, or to the managers of this paper. It is an established law of the trade that such practices are against the rights of the retailers, as well as against the best interests of the whole jobbing trade, and that firm which allows itself to do such things does not deserve to obtain the patronage of the retail trade. I understand that the sugar agreement, by the way, is being violated in Albany and Troy, and I presume that a good many dealers in this city would like to hear the same news of the agreement in this city. It is not unlikely that they will, by and by, but up to date it is as fervently held as the small boy holds to his first pair of boots.—Harlem in National Grocer.

MAHOMET AND THE MOUNTAIN.

With a few notable exceptions the retail grocers in our cities make but feeble efforts to capture new customers. Advertising is seldom resorted to, except that which is afforded by an attractive display of goods in the show window or by the distribution of circulars and handbills, and even these methods of reaching the public are not as generally adopted as they should be. As a consequence, the businesses of the majority of urban grocers are of very slow growth, while not a few are summarily closed out by their jobbers after a quite brief existence. Some months ago we made a suggestion that retail grocers, instead of sending their youngest and most inferior clerks out to take orders and drum up new trade, should try their own luck at that branch of the business. We urged a trial of this plan as the simplest and most effective way of extending a retail business. The other day, in a conversation with a prominent grocer in a near-by town, we learned that at least one dealer—a newly established grocer—in that place had made the experiment, and with very encouraging results. Our informant, however, had suffered severely by the enterprising and novel tactics of new-comer, and was inclined to severely condemn them. It appeared that not content with personally canvassing every house in the neighborhood of his store the recently established retailer had watched our informant's delivery wagons on their rounds, and at every residence where they delivered goods he made a point of calling and requesting a share of the people's trade. As he always took especial pains with his personal appearance, being dressed in fashionable clothing, and silk-hatted and kid gloved, besides having a very courteous and attractive manner, his request to see the lady of the house usually was acceded to, and the resulting interviews, during which a neatly engraved business card was presented and received, were generally fruitful, and the lder dealer lost part of his trade. Hence iis chagrin and indignation. We recommended our friend to adopt similar tactics, and assured him that the story of Mahomet and he mountain just about fitted the cases of himself and his energetic rival. When the prophet found that the mountain wouldn't come to him, he, like a wise man, went to he mountain. As a class the grocers expect the mountain to meet them half way, and will fail rather than follow Mahomet's example.

When the absence of the proprietor from the store would jeopard the business, the work of canvassing for orders should be deputed to a skilled and sagacious employe, not the boy who is usually sent out to the houses of regular customers to book the day's orders. A good clerk could not only attend to the regular taking of orders, but also visit a certain number of non-customers' houses every day, but the best results could not be expected from an employe.

In small stores where the clerical force is limited, and only the boy can be spared to go the rounds of customers' houses daily, we suggest that on the receipt of new goods a circular describing them be prepared and distributed by the boy on his trip. This plan may bring customers to the store to examine the new invoices, but if it fails in this respect, the chances are that the boy will book some orders for the novelties.

As regards the system of personal canvassing, it is worth the grocer's while to note the manner in which the most successful peddlers of fruits and other produce make most of their sales. With, say, half a dozen grocery stores within a radius of a small fraction of a mile, and all keeping fruits for sale, a peddler of fruits will enter the neighborhood and dispose of more stock than all of the grocers together, simply because he goes right to the consumers instead of waiting for them to come to him.

THE JOBBING GROCER.

An interesting discussion has arisen as to the future of the jobbing grocer. One of the Western grocery journals asks the question boldly, "is not his field of usefulness becoming more circumscribed year by year, and is he not being reduced to a mere agent of the manufacturer? Such is the history of wholesaling or jobbing in European countries. There are no immense jobbing houses doing an enormous general distributing business in Europe as there are in the United States. The manufacturers distribute their products to the retail trade direct. They may not do so at lower prices or by cheaper methods, but they do so upon the added expense of the jobbers' profit which they, the manufacturers, use to promote their individual interests instead of paying them to the jobber to promote the general interest of hundreds of manufacturers. How soon will this occur and how long will it be before the jobber, as in European countries, is superseded by the manufacturer or converted into an immense retailer or a manufacturer's agent, no longer asserting his former autocratic control over the distributing system?"

The Merchants' "Review," on behalf of the jobbing interest, replies as follows: "Certainly there are at present no signs of decadence in the jobbing trade. During the past decade there has been a greater growth of the leading jobbing houses of the country than ever before in twice the number of years, and all indications point to a corresponding increase of the transactions of these firms in the future. The condition of the grocery trade abroad is no safe guide in predicting the course of events in the same trade in this country, and there is a greater likelihood of foreigners adopting the American system than of American jobbers following in the footsteps of the foreigners. It is true that many foreign, or rather English, retail grocers buy direct from manufacturers, but the majority are much nearer the markets than the majority of our retailers are, this country being so much larger and less thickly populated. The American jobber stands between the manufacturer and the retailer, and protects the former from loss in the event of the failure of the latter. He also breaks packages of many kinds of goods and maintains a very costly credit department. If the jobber is abolished each manufacturer will be compelled to increase his clerical and shipping force, to break packages and to make up his mind to suffer a serious annual loss through failing retailers. From the fact that some of the grocery jobbers pack a few canned goods and prepare certain other articles for the retail trade, people have been led to believe that eventually the wholesalers will in time monopolize the manufacture and packing of specialties. Such is not our opinion, however."

The President of the Wholesale Grocers' Association, Mr. G. Waldo Smith, was questioned relative to the alleged decadence of the usefulness of the jobbing grocer. Mr. Smith did not believe there was the slightest foundation for such a belief. "I discussed the subject to some extent at a recent meeting of the Retail Grocers' Association, and I can only repeat what I then said. I believe that the manufacturer, wholesale grocer and retail grocer are actually necessary to human existence in this city. It is manifestly impossible for the manufacturer to deal directly with the consumer, and supply him at his home without the aid of the retailer As it takes at least 3,000 retailers to supply one million consumers, it is equally impossible for the manufacturer to deal directly with them, as it involves too great an outlay for salesmen, collectors, bookkeepers, delivery clerks, credit clerks, horses, wagons, etc. Although it is their privilege to do it if they have the capital to establish the necessary plant, and have in addition the knowledge as manufacturer, and the ability to carry on a great distributing business. As on the average it takes but thirty wholesale grocers to reach and supply 30,000 retailers, and through them one million of consumers, and as the wholesale dealer carries in stock the goods of all manufacturers, and has accounts with all retailers, the manufacturer must depend upon the wholesaler for the distribution of his goods. As their business is organized for, and has the necessary plant for this purpose, the wholesaler can distribute the goods of a large number of manufacturers much more promptly and with much less expense than the manufacturers can do it for themselves. The great question for the consideration of the Retail Grocers' Union and the Wholesale Grocers' Association is to find some fair and just basis on which the equities between each can be adjusted so that each can receive a fair remuneration for their services rendered to the public.

"The great obstacle that stands in the way of the success of the wholesaler and retailer is found in the reckless extension of credit to irresponsible parties, and in the ruinous cutting of prices that is indulged in by those who are not willing to pursue a 'live and let live' policy.

"This is an age of associations, and I firmly believe that the remedy for many of the evils in the trade will be met and cured by friendly associations, and co-operation brought about by the meetings of merchants in business and social relations."—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

Messrs. Allen & Price, Brockville, Ont., will open on Saturday on Perth street with a full line of groceries, flour and feed, etc.

The question has often been discussed as to which class of men succeed best in trade, the slow and safe sort or the more rapid and speculative. After some little experience with both in their mercantile capacity we are inclined to the opinion that the former more frequently attain prosperity than the latter. They are to be sure often a long time on the road, but as the saying is they 'get there all the same." During the time the slow man is carefully acquiring a modest competency the rustling and erratic merchant may have made several fortunes, only to have lost them, and there comes a time at last when he cannot recover himself and his subsequent career is chiefly useful as a warning. The advantages of making haste slowly may not be apparant to the young and inexperienced merchant, but those who have seen the results of its utter neglect in business, more fully appreciate its wisdom.—Grocer and Country Merchant.

No young man can possibly have mistaken his calling who finds in it what the world wants done.

One thing in particular should be impressed upon clerks—the necessity of careful attention to small customers.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Jan. 14, 1892.

GROCERIES.

Trade might be quieter and yet not disappointing, for there never is very much expected of the first fortnight of the new year. Buyers have taken more interest in certain lines, notably tea, than is usually signified so early in January. In sugar the movement has been respectable, but not large. The interest in fruits had pretty well spent itself before Christmas, and nothing is heard of new orders yet. Canned goods are fairly active. Wants continue to crop up in general groceries, some in this line, some in that, with little agreement in the orders but in the matter of tea, which at the moment is the most prominent commodity in demand. With very good signs in the first part of a month that is commonly a very backward one, the new year trade opens promisingly, for there ought to be room in the retail stores of the country for the disposal of a lot of groceries before spring. One full year of the new terms brought the retailers to the brink of '91 with a smaller aggregate of stock on hand than has been in the retail stores for years. Replenishment of supplies seems to have begun, as entries of a few tidy sales—ranging from $300 to $500, are already on the books of houses since the year opened. Payments come forward tardily.

CANNED GOODS.

Steadiness is the ascendant condition. Holders of good brands are easy in their minds and disinclined to part with them at anything below $1.05 for round lots of assorted vegetables. There are brands obtainable at $1, but the unanimity of jobbers at $1.05 for well-known labels is complete. Inquiries from the east show that many outside stocks are very low in peas, which of themselves are quoted at $1.10, but usually shipped at $1.05. The range in quality this year is as wide as ever. It is possible that there were tomatoes in the pack of '90 that touched a lower point of quality than any put up in '91, but the line of quality upwards has been pushed higher by the canners of goods that have always been distinguished for their merit. Fruits are very quiet and call for no further notice, all prices being stationary. Salmon is in incidental demand as part of "sundry" orders, but no especial interest in it is exhibited from any quarter. The price begins at $1.40. Lobster is steady but inactive, at $1.90 for ordinary brands, $2.70 for Crown and $2.95 for Horse Shoe.

According to returns received at the Fisheries Department the approximate total of salmon put up by the British Columbia canneries during the past season was 304,978 cases, or 14,638,944 pound cans. This is a falling off in the pack of about 84,000 cases as compared with previous year. The run on the Skeena river has been about an average, but on the Fraser river and Alert bay the past has been an off year. It is reported that a commission will be appointed to investigate canning methods on the Fraser and devise means for preventing the depletion of the salmon fisheries on that river as has been the case on the Columbia river. The commission will probably consist of Mr. Samuel Wilmot, superintendent of fish culture for the Dominion; Sheriff Armstrong, of New Westminister, and Mr. Hy. W. Higgins, Victoria, B. C.

COFFEES.

The market for Rios continues to be a matter of doubtful balance between buyers and sellers at New York. No lasting change has taken place, as every move is followed by recovery or relapse. Prices here are not at all perturbed by any uncertainties in the local market, for the prime condition necessary for a market—that is a demand—is a matter that is decided enough in the certainty of its absence. Prices hold at quotations in Prices Current. Javas and Mochas are likewise unchanged and quiet. Choice Rios are scarce, both here and in New York.

DRIED FRUIT.

Valencia raisins are purchasable at the easy prices they had dropped to in late December. The range is from 5¼c. for offstalk. They are very quiet, being now left almost absolutely alone. Malaga fruit, with the exception of a few packages of black baskets, is out of stock. Currants quote still at 5¾c. and upwards on spot, but offers from abroad have been received at prices which make it possible to shade the above. A purchase of a considerable lot was made by one house on Monday however at steadfast prices. Nobody appears to want figs. Natural, in bags, are 4¾ to 5c. Tenpound boxes quote at $1.15 to $1.20. Sevencrowned are worth 16c. California evaporated fruits are selling well on account of their cheapness, the abundance of the crop this year bringing prices down nearly 50 per cent on apricots. They job out as low as 12½c. per lb. A considerable quantity of stock is on the way to this market direct from California, and some is already in store.

NUTS.

Movement out of stock has not begun since Christmas, the sales made on holiday account sufficing to keep retail stocks adequate for the demand that is now experienced. Grenoble walnuts are 14 to 15c. Bordeaux 10 to 11c., Sicily filberts are 10 to 11c.

RICE AND SPICES.

Rice calls for no comment. This market has no business to report. Stocks are in a good condition quantitatively. The price is steady. Spices tend upwards. The value of ginger and pepper inclines towards the upper part of the range in Prices Current. Outside markets are very firm, and an advance in pepper is expected. Buying is freer on that the strength of that expectation. All spices are more active, and the strong tendency is uppermost in nearly all lines.

SUGAR.

There is some business going forward. The incentives to buying are, first, scarcity in retail hands, second, the increasing evidences of strength in present prices. The signs have not wavered in their indications of intrinsic strength in the future position of the market, which would surprise no one by an advance. The thing necessary to bring about an advance, if there is to be one, is an active demand. But what is looked for as an effect is becoming a cause of an active demand. The probability of higher prices is bringing buyers out, and though their operations have not amounted to much yet, they are large enough to make the trade very good for January. Yellow sugar is no longer to be had at the low price ruling at the end of '91. The very lowest, and that is exceptional, is 3.55. The price that holds by the general consent is 3⅝c. Granulated is unchanged at 4⅞ to 5c.

The following notes are from Willet & Gray's New York Sugar Statistical:

As has been plainly evident since the reduced estimates of crops began to be made, a considerable advance in prices must result with the coming in of the new year. During the first week of the year the advance has started, and has made quite a little progress. Sellers have found ready buyers, and a very considerable business has resulted at the advance.

The low point of the year 1892 for refined was unquestionably on the second day of the year, when orders were freely taken for granulated sugar at 3.92c. net cash. This sugar was made from raw sugar costing about 3.44c., and gave no profit to refiners. It was a foregone conclusion, therefore, that unless the competition between refiners was to be continued at a loss, an advance must be made in refined with the new year. Although a few small purchases of cane were made at below 3.44c., under special circumstances no large amount of supply was available, or likely to be, under the strong conditions affecting raw sugar throughout the world. Hence an advance in granulated to 3.98c., and a second advance to 4.04c. net cash during the week, calls for no surprise, and further advances will no doubt follow the course of the raw sugar market. Our advice still holds good to carry a full line of stock in 1892.

Total receipts of foreign sugar in 1891 into the United States were 1,760,449 tons against 1,338,047 tons in 1890. The domestic crop of Louisiana is estimated at 180,000 tons last year. The crops of Florida and Texas at 7,000 tons. The beet root sugar production in the United States in 1891 was 5,400 tons, and of sorghum sugar 570 tons, and of maple sugar 22,000 tons, and of molasses sugar 31,320 tons. The total production of the United States is 246,290 tons, against 280,000 tons last season. The total consumption of sugar in the United States in 1891 was 1,885,994 tons (say 1,619,704 tons foreign, 234,970 tons domestic, 31,320 tons home manufacture from foreign molasses), against 1,522,731 tons in 1890 (say 1,257,292 tons foreign, 212,000 tons domestic 53,439 tons home manufacture from foreign molasses). The increased consumption of 1891 over 1890 was 363,263 tons, or 23.86 per cent., and the consumption for each individual (per capita) 67.46 lbs., against 54.56 lbs. in 1890. The importation of refined sugar in 1891 was 2,772 tons at New York, 1,227 tons at Philadelphia, and 1,925 tons at New Orleans, and 833 tons at San Francisco. The export of raw and refined sugar in 1891 was 29 837 tons from the four ports, and 4,693 tons from San Francisco, and 212 tons from New Orleans. The extra increase of 18 per cent. in consumption above the usual average yearly increase of 5 per cent. is due directly to the free sugar tariff, and the extreme low range of prices ruling during the entire year, with small fluctuations. We do not look for an increase in 1892 much if any above the nominal rate of 5 per cent., especially as the range of prices in 1892 will be on a higher level than in 1891.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.

There is a considerable quantity of United States syrup on the market, and a good deal continues to be offered. The lowest point quoted is 2c. Canadian low grades are scarcer. There is not a very active business in any description.

Molasses moves in small quantities at unchanged prices. There is a very fine sample of New Orleans obtainable at 55c. On account of the shortage N.O. molasses has advanced several cents in New York.

TEAS.

A quite active demand for teas is the leading feature of the week's business. The partiality of the demand is quite pronounced for mediums, valued at 23c. upwards. A considerable number of packages at about 18c. have also been moved. The price of Japans is stronger outside, and good medium grades have developed a cent or even two in some cases in New York. Even locally the buyer finds fewer favors this week than were within his reach throughout the six weeks preceding the close of the old year. The lowest point in Japans here is 12½c., and the quality is sufficiently commented upon by giving the quotation. Black range upwards from 15c., Young Hysons from 16c.

The demand for Indian tea, says the Produce Markets Review, continues active, and a large business has been transacted in all kinds. The tendency of the market is stronger, more particularly for the medium and lower grades the latter having risen from ¼d. to ½d., and from the lowest point about ¾d. Notwithstanding this advance, prices are quite 1 1-2d. lower than at this time last year, and providing there is no further material increase in values, there is no reason to anticipate any check in the satisfactory demand. On the other hand, if any attempt to force up prices to an unjustifiable level met with any measure of success, it would be sure to stop the demand, and similar unsatisfactory results to those experienced in the earlier part of the year would have again to be contended with. The quantity of Ceylon tea offered has again been small, and prices are firmer. The demand from the country has somewhat diminished, chiefly owing no doubt to the cheapness of Indian teas, which at the moment, except where Ceylon flavor is demanded, undoubtedly show superior value. The quality of the imports during the week has shown a slight improvement, and as reports from the island point to better weather, teas of good quality may be on the way. Java teas are much neglected except for export, for which the demand is rather more active. The quantity of Indian tea brought forward has continued heavy, which, it is satisfactory to say, met an active demand, and were nearly all taken off with a healthier competition than for some time past, at a further slight advance. The common sorts are gradually recovering from the recent depression, and are now ¼d. to ½d. per lb. dearer than they were a fortnight ago. The better and strong-liquoring kinds also have been more readily purchased, and still form the smallest proportion of the general supply.

MARKET NOTES.

A new chewing gum has been placed on the market by the Toronto Biscuit and Confectionery Co. It is called Botofotopeto. Already large sales are reported.

Mr. E. J. Berneche, representing the Meyer-Bain Mfg. Co., manufacturer of tomato catsup, St. Louis, Missouri, was in the city on Monday.

Mr. C. A. Smylie of Young & Smylie, licorice manufacturers, Brooklyn, N. Y., was visiting the trade on Friday and Saturday last.

Mr. J. C. Conlin, of J. W. Lang & Co., leaves this week on his western trip. He has crossed the Rockies sixteen times.

Messrs. Smith & Keighley have just received a large consignment of California evaporated fruit. It is very choice, and orders for assorted lots will be filled at 12½ to 15c. in 25 lb. boxes.

Walter Thomson, the well known oatmeal miller from Mitchell, was in the city this week. He says the demand for oatmeal is dull, and that most of the millers are consigning to Scotch and English markets.

PETROLEUM.

The prices of refined are unchanged in quotation, though by a drop of 10c. on empty barrels the price of the oil is in effect reduced ¼c. per gal. The "empties" are now taken at 65c., f.o.b., Toronto. Until lately they brought 75c. Business in refined is normal.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia Crude $1.30½ per bbl. Oil Springs crude $1.30½. Quietness has been the principal feature in the crude market during the past week, and only a limited business has been done at and about the old quotations. Producers may expect an advance shortly. It is only a question of time, however, and probably a very short time too, when an upward movement will be inagurated. Both refiners and producers expect it from day to day, but what figures it will ultimately touch no one pretends to guess. As far as refined is concerned the conjectural question that awakens most interest just now is, what is probably the actual supply of burning oil in the hands of our largest refiners, and stored in the eastern markets, Montreal and Quebec in particular. Prices are cut very fine and dealers have but little opportunity to make a profitable turn.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The market improves for choice tubs, though it is necessary for the tubs to be actually offered to elicit the highest quotation. In the absence of exceptional stock the figures quoted are 16 to 17c., but when really prime is obtainable the price is capable of a rise of 2c. A few packages have been bought at 19c. There is more money at the same price for a few days' steady supply of the same quality. The number of large rolls continues undiminished in the daily receipts, and the quality of an increasing proportion continues to be below what is wanted. The value going just now is 14 to 16c. Low grade butter is hard to get, the country having been pretty well scoured to make up a shipment on Montreal account. Mediums are 13 to 15c.

Cheese is firm at 11 to 11¼c. This price holds for choice fall makes. The English market is steady.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES—Good shipping stock ranges from $1.50 to $2.50 according to class. A fairly active market exists. The supply threatens to overtake the demand and bring down values.

BEANS—Jobbed out, the price is $140 to $1.50, while cars outside are to be had at from $1.20 to $1.30. The market is very dull just now, small stocks sufficing for all the demand.

CRANBERRIES—Are quiet and in moderate volume in stock at $7.50 to $8. A quiet business is kept up.

DRIED APPLES—The supply is limited, but this fact does not excite quotations, which are unchanged at 4c. outside and 4½c. here. Deliveries and offers are both backward.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Nothing is doing just now. The concentration of stock has not been followed by any fresh transaction for export. The price is nominal at 7¼ to 7½c. for cars and 8c. for smaller lots.

EGGS—Are firm. Choice case lots of fresh are worth 18c., with a slight advance on small lots. The price sinks to 16c. for some descriptions which are received. Limed are steady at 14 to 15c.

GAME—Rabbits are plentiful and hard to sell at more than 15c.

HIDES—There has been no change either in the quotations or the state of the market, No. 1 green cows' being 4½c., with a cent off for each grade below No. 1. Cured are 5c.

HONEY—The sale of honey is retarded by the abundance of canned fruit and the cheapness of sugar. Extracted is 8 to 10c., and filled combs are 14 to 16c.

HOPS—A smarter movement is to be noted in hops at about 20c. for round lots, though as high as 22c. is asked and as low as 18c. is offered.

ONIONS—Are inactive and steady at $2.25 to $2.50 per bbl.

POULTRY—Turkeys are worth 10c., chickens 40 to 60c., geese 6 to 7c. Poultry is scarce, chickens particularly so.

POTATOES—Offers are not numerous, nor is there anything to invite them. It is hard to obtain 40c. on track, and offers have been made below that without a sale being effected. Out of store the price is about 50c.

SEEDS—The offerings have been quite free, and all have been taken at $6.25 to $6 50 for alsike, and for red clover $5.23 to $5.75, the former price, and about 25c. upwards being for Western Ontario, while the latter, ranging down to $5.50, went for northern and eastern deliveries.

SKINS—Sheep are steady at $1 to $1.05. Calf are quiet at 5 to 7c.

TALLOW—There is no change, the price continuing at 2c. for rough and 5½ to 5¾c. fot refined.

WOOL—Fleeces are dull at 19c. Pulled is worth 21 to 22½c. for ordinary, and 25 to 27c. for extra.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

The views of sellers as to the value of dressed hogs strengthen with the advance of the season and the colder weather. They now ask $5.60 to $5.65 for selected western

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO, Jan. 14, 1892.

The week's trade has been almost entirely local. Inquirers have not been a feature of the week any more than have actual transactions on outward account. Prices have been steady and those of last week recur almost throughout the list this week. In feed there has been more activity than in flour, but the supply, which had got behind sometime ago is now abreast of the demand. Credit continues to be a feature of the business in flour from some milis.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $5.25; strong bakers', $4.85; Ontario patents, $5; straight roller, $4.75; extra, $4.10 to $4.15: low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.30 to $5.50; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.90 to $5.10; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90; straight roller, $4.10 to $4.15; extra, $4; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL—The price of oatmeal has not fluctuated, $4 to $4.25 representing the range, with $3.90 for cars. Cornmeal is also steady at $3.80 to $4.25. Grits and hominy are unchanged at $4.

FEED—Bran is easier at $15 to $15.50. Shorts are unchanged at $18. Mixed feed is $25, cracked corn $1.25, feeding corn 53c., oats 34 to 35c.

HAY—No. 1 timothy is firm at $12 to $12.50. Mixed is $10 to $10.50.

STRAW—The market is kept supplied at $6 to $6.50 for oat.

Mr. John Campbell, Erie Mills, St. Thomas, is now developing a trade with the West Indies, and is filling a large order for flour for those islands.

MONTREAL

The flour market continues very quiet, the demand from outside points being small. Prices are unchanged. Patent spring, $5 to $5.35; patent winter, $5 to $5.25; straight roller, $4.65 to $4.75: extra, $4.30 to $4 35; superfine, $4 to $4.10; city strong bakers', $5 to $5.10; strong bakers', $4.80 to $4.90.

There is a very limited movement in oatmeal at unchanged prices. Standard, per bag, $2.10 to $2.20; granulated, $2.10 to $2.20; rolled, $2.10 to $2.20.

Feed rules quiet and unchanged. We quote bran $16 to $17; shorts, $19 to $20; and mouillie, $25.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

FLOUR—The market does not show any improvement; what is moving is only in a jobbing way, with prices about the same as last quoted, viz., Manitoba $5.90 to $6, Ontario High Grade $5.25 to $5.35, Medium Patents $5.10 to $5.15.

CORN MEAL—There is not much moving. Prices are a shade easier at $3.05 to $3.10.

OATMEAL—Is quoted $4.65 to $4.80 for Roller, and for Standard $4.60 to $4.70, with very little demand.

laid down here and have been quite tenacious for this price. Actual business hangs back on account of this position of sellers, and what sales have been made were on a basis of $5.50, to which point packers have consented to come. Those handled this week have included a large proportion of good northern which came up to the highest price paid. Products are quiet.

BACON—The price is easier. Long clear is now 7½ to 7¾c., backs are 10½c., bellies 9½c., to 10c., rolls 8½ to 8¾c.

HAMS—Some improvement is notable in the demand at 10½ to 11c.

LARD—Canadian pure is 9¼ to 9¾c. Compound is a cent lower.

BARREL PORK—Mess is $13.75 to $14.25: short cut is $15.50 to $16.

FRESH MEATS—There are freer offerings and more sales of lamb and beef, the former at 7½ to 8c., the latter at 4½ to 5c. for forequarters and 7 to 8c. for hind quarters. Mutton is 6½ to 7½c.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

There is a probability of an advance in the prices of oysters, as there has been a considerable advance in Baltimore prices, and if this continues, an advance will be necessary here. Dried fish have not a very brisk demand, and the demand for fresh fish has been very sluggish and will continue so for another week, when the trade will undoubtedly improve. But the last week has been the quietest in fresh fish that has been experienced for some months.

SALT.

Four carloads have been moved this week, but on account of the cold weather packers are not needing so much, and consequently the demand is not as brisk, but there is a prospect for a large demand when a mild spell sets in.

GREEN FRUIT.

The green fruit market undergoes little change. The demand for lemons is considerably improved since la grippe became prevalent. Values are steady at last week's quotations. Valencia oranges are $5.25, Floridas $2.60 to $3. Messina lemons are $4 to $5. Malaga lemons in boxes are $3 to $3.50, in chests $6.75 to $7.50. Bananas are $2 to $2.75 per bunch.

DRY GOODS.

Nothing special has transpired during this week. The trade at the wholesale houses is somewhat sluggish at present, but wholesale merchants are looking forward to a brisk spring trade. The sleighing at present general over Ontario, will materially aid the country dealer to work off his surplus winter stock and prepare the way for a better spring trade.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Jan. 12, 1892.

There has been no particular feature to mention in connection with the grocery trade since our last, except it be the advance in sugar, which went into effect on Thursday last. With the continued firmness of raw stock in outside markets this was inevitable sooner or later, and it is not at all improbable that further stiffening may result in the very near future. At any rate, although buyers are more disposed for business, it is noticeable that sellers are not urging business at all. Otherwise the week has furnished no special features.

SUGAR.

Since our last there has been an advance in yellows, which was decided upon by the refiners on Thursday last, and since then buyers have been more disposed for business, but sellers are not urging business to any extent. We now quote granulated unchanged at 4½c, but yellows a full ¼c. higher at 3½ to 4 3-16c. With the disposition shown at present a further rise would not be surprising.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are moving very slowly at about 25c. for the American product and 28 to 30c. for the domestic. Molasses have a small jobbing sale at 36c. for Barbadoes.

TEAS.

The tea market is quiet, the only movement confined to low grade Japans. The market, however, is in a very healthy condition and a good trade is looked for in the near future.

COFFEES.

Coffee continues firm all round under light supplies, and there is no possibility of any lower prices at present. Demand is fair but the movement is restricted by the supply. We quote :—Rios, 15 to 20c.; Java, 26 to 30oc.; Mocha, 27 to 30c.; Jamaica, 18 to 20c.; and Moracaibo, 23 to 25c.

RICE.

The rice market is dull and without change, the local movement being cofined to small jobbing orders. We quote :—Patna, $4.50 to $5; Japan, $4.75 to $5; standard, $3.90, and off grades $3.50, all in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

The market for dried fruit is firm but dull, with no business of importance to note. Valencia raisins are steady at 5c. for No. 1 and there are some off-stalk moving at 5½ to 6c., while layers are held for 6½ to 7c. Currants rule firm at 5¼ to 6c. for Patras and Vostizzas in cases 7½ to 8c.

NUTS.

Nuts rule quiet and dull, with no change under a small business. Walnuts are steady at 12½ to 13c. for Grenoble and 10½ to 11c. for Bordeaux; Toicos, 12 to 13c.; Terragona almonds, 14 to 15c.

CANNED GOODS.

The business in this line is small and unimportant, with little or nothing to note. Values generally rule firm, but of course are nominal in the absence of business.

GREEN FRUIT.

The green fruit business is dull and restricted to a small jobbing movement. Oranges are steady for Floridas $3 to $3.50 per box, while Valencias are dull at $4.50 to $4,75 per case. Lemons are in more demand recently, but no change in values, which remain at $3.50 to $3.75.

APPLES.

It is now only a jobbing market for apples, and we hear of nothing doing in the way of car lots. For ordinary jobbing trade we quote $2.50 to $3 per bbl. Evaporated and dried furnish nothing note worthy.

HOPS.

Business in this line is small and restricted to an odd purchase now and then to satisfy brewers' actual requirements. Holders in the country continue firm, and nothing at present here could be moved except at 20 to 22c.

PROVISIONS.

The provision market continues dull with no new feature to mention. Pork is only being taken to satisfy immediate wants, owing to the belief that prices will be lower. Canadian short cut, per brl. $14.75 to $15.00; mess pork, western, per brl. $13.50 to $14.00 ; short cut, western, per brl. $15.75 to $16; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c; bacon, per lb. 9c. to 10c ; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¼ to 8c.

CHEESE.

The market has been steady with some movement to note, but it cannot be called active. The fact is, although buyers in England are coming up to holders' ideas here, they are doing so slowly, and of course this makes business quiet. All the under-priced stock here has been pretty well weeded out, and to move finest would certainly take 11 to 11½c. The Liverpool cable is unchanged at 55s.

BUTTER.

There is a fair jobbing enquiry for creamery and Townships dairy at quotations. The high values of both these goods renders shipping business in them difficult, but in Western dairy a good trade is possible, but holders want extreme figures We quote:—Late-made creamery, 00 to 24 ; finest Townships, 20 to 20½c. ; finest Western, 16½ to 17½c.

EGGS.

There is a fairly steady movement in eggs, the market having a decidedly stronger tendency. Round lots are still moving at 15 to 16c., but 17c. is obtainable for single cases of choice stock.

POULTRY, ETC.

The poultry market is well cleaned up. Turkeys continue in fair demand while chickens are scarce. Ducks have a good call but geese and fowls are slow. We quote : Turkeys 9 to 10c., chickens 6 to 8c., fowls 5 to 6c., geese 5 to 6c., ducks 8 to 9c.

GRAIN.

The local grain market continues dull and uninteresting. The stocks in store, compared with those of a week ago show an increase of 187,957 wheat, 17,263 oats, 560 rye, and a decrease of 80,399 peas, and 22,304 barley. Compared with a year ago there is an increase of 233,716 wheat, 52,827 peas, 104,646 barley, and a decrease of 80,408 oats, 11,711 rye. We quote :—No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04 ; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04 ; peas, 75 to 76c. per 66 pounds; oats, 35c. to 36c. per 34 pounds in store, corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 48 to 50c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, Jan. 14, 1892.

BREADSTUFFS.—Breadstuffs remain much the same, although wheat in Chicago has advanced we dont look for much change before the latter part of the month.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $5.75 to 6.00 ; High grade patents, $5.10 to 5.20 ; Good 90 per cent Patents, $4.90 to 5.00 ; Straight grade, $0.00 to 4.80; Good seconds, $0.00 to 4.40 ; Graham flour, $0.00 to 4.60 ; Oatmeal, $0.00 to 4.15 ; Rolled wheat, $5.58 ; Wheat bran per ton, $20.00 to $21.00; Middlings, $00.00 to $26.50 ; Shorts, $00.00 to $22.50.; Moulee, $24.00 to $28.50; Split Peas $0.00 to $4.10; White beans per bushel, $1.50 to 1.53 ; Pot Barley per bbl, $3.90 to $4.50 ; Canadian oats, choice quality, 43c. to 45c. ; P. E. I. oats 41 to 45c.

SUGAR.—Both local and foreign markets are very quiet after the holidays, and the situation as well as prices remain unchanged.

Cut loaf, 5⅜c.; Granulated, 4⅜. to 4⅞c; Circle A, 4½c.; White extra C, 4⅜c.; Standard, 3⅞c. to 3⅞c ; Extra Yellow C, 3⅝c.; Yellow C, 3½c.

MOLASSES.—Barbados 35c. ; Demerara 35 to 38c. ; Diamond N. 48c. ; Porto Rico 34 to 35c. ; Trinidad 32½ to 38c. ; Antigua 33 to 34c.

FISH.—There is nothing new to note regarding fish. Herring are said to be plentiful on Newfoundland coasts, but as our vessels are prohibited from catching them, they are hard to obtain for use as bait, and consequently our deep sea fisheries cannot be prosecuted as usual.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Jan. 14, 1892.

MOLASSES—The market has been fairly active. Prices are somewhat easier and quoted at 34 to 35c. for Barbadoes. Other kinds are very little called for.

SUGAR—Is reported higher, though holders of stocks have not advanced their prices yet and are selling granulated at $4.45 to $4.55.; yellows 3½ to 3¾c.; pulverized 6 to 6¼c.; Paris lumps 6 to 6½c.

PRODUCE—Eggs are very dull of sale, as all dealers are well supplied. The prices are 16 to 20c.

BUTTER—Is in fair demand. Any choice article is quickly picked up at 17 to 19c.

CHEESE—Is not much called for. The price is unchanged.

CHANGE THE SYSTEM.

It is next to impossible to look through the columns of a trade paper without finding something in the shape of advice relative to how merchants shall, or ought to, do this, that or the other thing. We have also, to some extent, indulged in this little well meant pleasantry, looking at the matters in question possibly more from the high journalistic standpoint than from the entirely practical plane on which everyday business affairs are conducted. At this time, however, we shall reverse the order and offer a few suggestions which may not inappropriately be termed negative advice.

It is quite natural, right and proper that every man should desire what is due him, and he is entirely right in using all proper means to obtain that which belongs to him. No one will dispute the correctness of this statement, but in the collection of debts there is a right way and a wrong way—if not a wrong, at least an unjustifiable or unavailing way—to go about it.

Just so long as the indiscriminate credit system prevails among retailers, just that long will people buy injudiciously, and the books of the merchant be burdened with many accounts which he will be unable to collect. Not every person who gets in debt to the merchant is a "dead beat," by any means ; neither is every one who is slow in paying his bills dishonest Many such an one has simply followed the system, thoughtlessly gone beyond his financial depth, and while perfectly willing to pay finds it an exceedingly difficult matter to do so. Others, again, meet with misfortunes or unexpected reverses; they must have certain things which cash alone can provide ; because of the system they are indebted to the too accommodating merchant who has furnished them the "necessaries of life," and while they would be glad to pay every cent they owe, find it absolutely impossible to do so, without being granted time.

The unfortunate classes above mentioned are simply victims of the universal credit system, for which the retail merchants themselves are more responsible than anyone else. They have educated the people up—or down—to procuring their necessary supplies by the credit method, and must, perforce, expect to accumulate a large stock of so-called "bad debts."

Change the system and a better state of things will follow.—Grocer and Trade Index.

YEARS OF MARVELOUS GROWTH.

The Circulation of THE CANADIAN GROCER has increased one third in the past three months and it has now more than double the circulation among Grocers and General Merchants than that of any other journal in the Dominion. Advertisers make a note of this.

We have been steadily on the march after subscribers for the past five years and our footprints may be traced through every village, town and city from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Thousands of dollars have been spent yearly in the work. We now have our reward in seeing THE CANADIAN GROCER the leading trade journal in Canada.

ATTENTION TO BUSINESS.

There never was a time in the history of the industrial and commercial world when strict and personal attention to business was more necessary than at the present time. The growing competition in every line of trade and manufacture requires not only the strictest economy in every department and detail, but strict personal attention as well. This is one reason why Americans are, and have been, successful in almost every enterprise they have undertaken. Instead of leaving the work to be performed by a paid manager or agent, the American manufacturer attends to the business himself, so far at least as the general management is concerned. He is a worker in every sense of the word.

Those who are inclined to think that employers are overbearing and grasping in their dealings with others should not be too severe in their criticisms. The employe has a very easy time of it compared with his employer. His hours of labor are fixed, and his work is of a routine nature, requiring very little thought or care, except that necessary to the faithful performance of his duties. He knows just how much he is making, and when his day's work is done he can lay aside all care without fret or worry.

But with his employer it is quite different. With him it is constant, unceasing work, and his mind can never be entirely free from his business cares. He has to meet and overcome competition. He must watch the markets, both as a purchaser and a seller of goods. He must plan and devise, direct and control everything pertaining to his business. Not for a moment can he rest, for in that moment he may lose large sums of money, which years of patient industry have accumulated.

The life of a successful business man is one constant round of work from morning till night, and often far into the latter. His hours of labor are not fixed by any arbitrary law, nor is his labor that of fulfilling a duty to another for which he is paid a stipulated price.

The young man who, ambitious to enter business upon his own account, chafing at the position he holds or the wages he receives, will do well to give the matter careful consideration before undertaking the responsibilities and risks which are a part of every business man's life.

There is too much competition, too many shrewd and prosperous men already in the field, for a young man to combat with unless he be endowed with pluck and perseverance sufficient to carry him through a long and severe struggle, willing to work, not for day wages, not a certain number of hours per day, but for recognition as a successful business man, whether it call for one hour or 24 each day, whether the pay be one cent or $1 per hour.

In any case or under any conditions, either as the man of business, who works for his success through the employment and direction of others, or the laborer who gains his livelihood by working for another, strict attention to business, the faithful performance of the duties involved, and the considerate adaptation of means to an end is the only sure method of winning success.—The Manufacturers' Gazette.

MUST DRAW THE LINE SOMEWHERE.

A well known travelling man, so the story goes, was recently taken to task by his employer upon the excessive amount of his expense account. Being a valuable man, and unfortunately (for the house) well aware of the value of his services, he immediately threatened to resign. Whereupon the proprietor mildly said : "Don't be hasty. Wait until I finish. I notice you charge 25 cents for blacking your shoes. We don't kick about that. You have frequently stopped at $4 a day hotels ; that's all right. You sometimes pay $1 for a bus ; we let that pass. But when you charged for sleeping car fare from St. Paul to Minneapolis, we thought it about time to enter a protest.—American Implement Herald.

All readers must be aware, after the deplorable death at Hamilton, just now, of the danger of lighting or starting fires with coal oil. Many of your customers are in such danger, who never would be, if a good substitute was brought to their notice. Such an article we offer in the Star Fire Lighter which sells fast, affords a good profit, and is put up in a most attractive manner. Send for a few samples and judge for yourself. Price $1.70 per case. Star Mfg., Co., London.

Competition is keen and active, and the only way to meet it successfully is to buy from the best houses, and at lowest prices.

AN OLD RETAILER GONE DOWN.

We are sorry to have to record the failure of Mr. Richard Fitzgerald, a man who had grown venerable in the grocery trade of St. Catharines. That city had to fail in its prospects before the honorable trader could be overcome. There are few who can stand the adversity that tells on a whole city, and Mr. Fitzgerald's interests were bound up in the prosperity of St. Catharines. Mr. Fitzgerald leaves a business record behind him that failure can cast no shadow over, and it is a pity that worth cannot always win. The St. Catharines Journal thus refers to the failure:

It is with the deepest regret that we today publish the announcement that Mr. Richard Fitzgerald, who for the past forty years carried on the leading grocery business in this city, has been compelled by adverse circumstances to make an assignment of his estate for the benfit of his creditors. We regard it as nothing less than a public calamity that a citizen who has earned so high a reputation as an honest merchant, and who has done so much for the city, should be brought to this low estate. Mr. Fitzgerald is one of the largest land owners in this city, and it is to his unfailing confidence in the ever coming but never arriving prosperity of the city that he owes his present difficulties. The Loan Company, which hold a mortgage for some $25,000 against Mr. Fitzgerald, has real estate security, dwellings and stores, which a few years ago were valued at fully four times their present claim. The rentals were then more than sufficient to meet the mortgagee's annual demand, but year after year they have dwindled, and now a large number of the dwellings are unoccupied, while the taxes and interest continually increase. Mr. Fitzgerald's liabilities beyond the Loan Company's claim are comparatively small, and he has made a long and vigorous fight, hoping against hope in the face of a decreasing trade, hard times and ever increasing burdens, and now that he is compelled through no fault of his own to succumb, he deserves and will receive the deepest sympathy from his fellow citizens. His suspension involves no personal stain; no attempt, we are informed, has been made to prefer any creditor or protect his own family, but all he possesses has been unreservedly delivered to the assignee. We sincerely hope that Mr. Fitzgerald's creditors, many of whom have dealt with him for years and benefited largely by his trade, will deal kindly and generously with him in his adversity, and with thousands in this city and neighborhood we hope to see, in the near future, Mr. Fitzgerald again on his feet. At all events no dishonor attaches to Mr. Fitzgerald, for he never knew the word.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The Patrons want cheap goods. Are they proceeding in the right way to get them? Here is their argument: There are too many retailers; if we cut off the consumptive demand from one-half or three-fourths of them we shall drive one-half or three fourths of them out of the trade; prices will be lightened by the reduction in the cost of distribution which will ensue. They reason that the public will get much cheaper goods, prices easing under the removal of the extra profits formerly levied for the support of the people unnecessarily engaged in trade. That is, the fewer the traders are the cheaper the prices will be, an inversion of the law of competition. Monopoly then must be a nursery of cheapness. Of course the Patrons can say that their position is not reducible to the last proposition. Though the number of traders is cut down, yet the profits of those traders are prescribed by the consumers, and thus they point out, is held in check the tendency of relaxed competition to advance prices. But this provision amounts to nothing, and it is childish to put any faith in it. The one thing that the Patrons can control is the margin of profit that the subservient trader shall be allowed. They cannot control the price, and the more they thin out the ranks of the retailers the more unmanageable will prices become. Have these Patrons so slight an acquaintance with the trade question as not to see that the body of the retail trade exerts, by the very force of its numbers, a powerful downward pressure upon prices? Lighten or remove that pressure and prices will shoot up. The Patrons are constantly crying out against wholesale combines. They would cry out more against them if the retailers' influence did not intervene to modify the prices that combines might be pleased to place on goods.

As was remarked in a former article, the retailer is regarded by the patrons solely as a seller, and in this character is obnoxious to them. But he is also a buyer and in this relation is beneficial to the consumer. For the retailer in the present circumstances of trade must lose a large share of his profit in the friction of competition. He cannot get what he feels is a reasonable compensation for his services, his outlay and his risk. He knows it is useless to try to force selling prices up to the point he considers profitable. His resource is therefore to force buying prices down. And when an army of retailers are all operating for the same object, and have a wide field of wholesale ground to work on, they cannot help but depress prices considerably below the ideas that wholesalers wish to realize. The buying competition of the retailers benefits consumers as much as the selling competition of the retailers does. The more traders there are in a place the more will they vie with each other to get bargains in the wholesale market, and the more they will prevail, to the great advantage of consumers. Take the Wholesale Grocers' Guild. If there is any body of men in this country that might be credited with the power to dictate prices, surely it should be. It is strongly organized, its members are pledged and bound to uphold prices and terms, yet that association is very powerfully affected by the retail grocery trade. Would it be, if that trade were extinguished and its place taken by one-fourth or one-fifth the number of agents of consumers? It certainly would not. The disappearance of free local competition would make the Guild the arbiter of prices in a degree that its members never hoped for.

The Patrons take a very shallow view of the price question. They forget that the retail trade is but one layer, and that the forces that make for large profits do not reside in that layer but in ones below it. The retail trade is really the conserver of easy prices. If it should be abolished—which of course it will not be—there will be an era of high prices for the infatuated people who destroy it. No quicker means could be taken to hasten the reign of unrestricted monopoly. The Patrons' store keepers will not be on the side of low prices as the free storekeepers are. The former want to get as many dollars out of their 12½ per cent. margin as it will yield them, and the higher the prices the larger sum will that 12½ per cent. amount to. The Patron trader can eke out a little on high cost prices, as the independent retailer can on low cost prices. He will be in the service of Monopoly, which will then have both the wholesale and the so-called retail trade enlisted in its cause. The farmers have now a big advantage, and too many of them are aware of it for the Patron movement to come to much. They perceive that goods are sold at low prices, that ready money is not necessary to get possession of them, and that the war of traders is altogether a great benefit to consumers. They will not surrender this for the mirage that is to be seen through Patron glasses.

"CHEAP CASH STORE."

Time and weather may furrow the front of the wayside trading shop, but they cannot obliterate or erase the motto which describes it as a Cheap Cash Store. Everything else crumbles away before the corroding power of oxygen, but the words which make that sign remain. The board which bears it may scarcely hang together, but the legend seems to give a bond of union to its particles and keeps it from falling to pieces. Such, at all events, seems to be the case. A few decrepit and dilapidated buildings that we know of, once stores but now deserted, still bear aloft that relic of their ancient dignity. The old fossil-like sign on any building is enough to superannuate it. It has done service long enough. It speaks too mournfully of the past. It may be a new sign so far as the adoption of it by a particular store goes, but it has a retrospective effect alike for the middle-aged man and the centenarian. It is time it was dropped. Judged by some of the stories which bear this sign, it would seem that cheapness and cash are about as unsubstantial a basis as sweetness and light to build a business upon. We frequently see the motto upon stores whose trade appears to be in the last stages of decay. There are several stock phrases used in advertising that would be obsolete in any other service in the language, and would long ago have been cast off. This is one of them. A trader should aim to coin phrases for his own use in advertising. If he uses a motto at all, it should individualize his store as much as that upon an escutcheon individualizes the family it belongs to.

The phrase "Cheap Cash Store" does not advertise. In the first place it is too common to be capable of giving a distinguishing character to a store, and it is the object of advertising to give a distinguishing character. In the second place, the phrase does not name anybody, and therein is faulty as an advertising sign. The trader wants his name known and should allow nothing to eclipse that in conspicuousness The name will connote many things. If the owner has kept that truth in mind he will be always careful in his business practices, that the qualities of honesty, business sagacity, amiability, neatness, etc.. may become associated with his name and may be recalled to mind every time his name is seen in print or heard in utterance. In such cases the best advertisement is the name. There is simplicity about it, and there is effect. Of course, not everybody succeeds in makign his name a synonym of all the commercial virtues, but all should try to do so. It is a considerable capital in itself, is a good name among your customers. Whatever additions a trader may affix to his sign or put upon his store front, he should always remember to have his name there. We know of an instance in which a storekeeper and his assistant were popularly confused, the principal being as often taken for the clerk as otherwise. The store lacked a sign with the trader's name on, and what increased the chances for confusion was the greater age of the clerk, his more pleasing address and his prominence in the affairs of the business. His employer rather shunned than courted popularity. When the other man finally started in opposition to him the trade followed the former. The name was lacking in the popular mind to rivet the acquired trade to the original store.

The term "Cheap Cash Store" is as often as not a misnomer. A customer usually finds he pays as high prices as at stores where this sign does not hang, and he can buy as often on credit too as he can buy elsewhere. That is another fault from the astute advertisers stand point, for the successful business man finds it pays to say nothing but what sounds like the truth in his advertisement. When a man gets the name of issuing reliable advertisements he has a great advantage over competitors not so reputed.

THE SPOKEN WORD, THE WRITTEN BOND.

In business experience there is much that is liable to make a man sceptical of human virtue. There are probably as many honorable men now as there ever were, but there are fewer men whose word would be taken as readily as their bond. This is not a paradox: it does not mean that there is less honor, but it does mean that there is more insistence on business form, or more cynicism, or more of both than there used to be. Honor of itself is not accepted as a sufficient security. Business men can scarcely be brought together into union for any purpose unless each individual is bound by an oath, or a forfeit, or both, to assure all the rest that he means to do what he promises. Hardly can a body of retailers in the smallest town agree to observe an early closing hour unless each is satisfied that all the rest are strongly bound by some inviolable moral engagement or some material consideration. The same guarantees are required in the larger matters of commercial concern, and the reinforcements lately introduced into the Guild compact illustrate this. The agreement among the manufacturers to uphold the prices of nails is another evidence of how great the mutual distrust is among men engaged in the same business. Five thousand dollars forfeit and an affidavit are required of each man before his promise to comply with the terms of the agreement is accepted. This makes his fellows independent of his honor. It may be untainted or it may be rotten to the core; there are other interests to secure his adhesion.

If such restraints as an oath and a heavy forfeit will not hold a man, certainly the voice of honor will have little influence over him; on the other hand, a man who will not keep his word as a point of honor, is worth watching even after he has deposited his forfeit and taken the oath. These securities do not necessarily root the obligation any deeper in the moral nature of a man whose word is worse than his bond, but they make detection a more perilous thing. The right or wrong of a violation of a pledged oath is merely a matter of casuistry for a man who will break his passed word. The money forfeit will do more to keep such men up to their engagements than the moral obligation.

These trade agreements are hard to keep intact it seems upon any other assumption than that every man is a rogue. If the practice of giving wives and children as hostages for the good faith of the signatories to a trade compact could be legalized, it is probable that it would be brought in requisition for the mutual satisfaction of all the parties to such an agreement. Suspicion, not honor, is the bond of union.

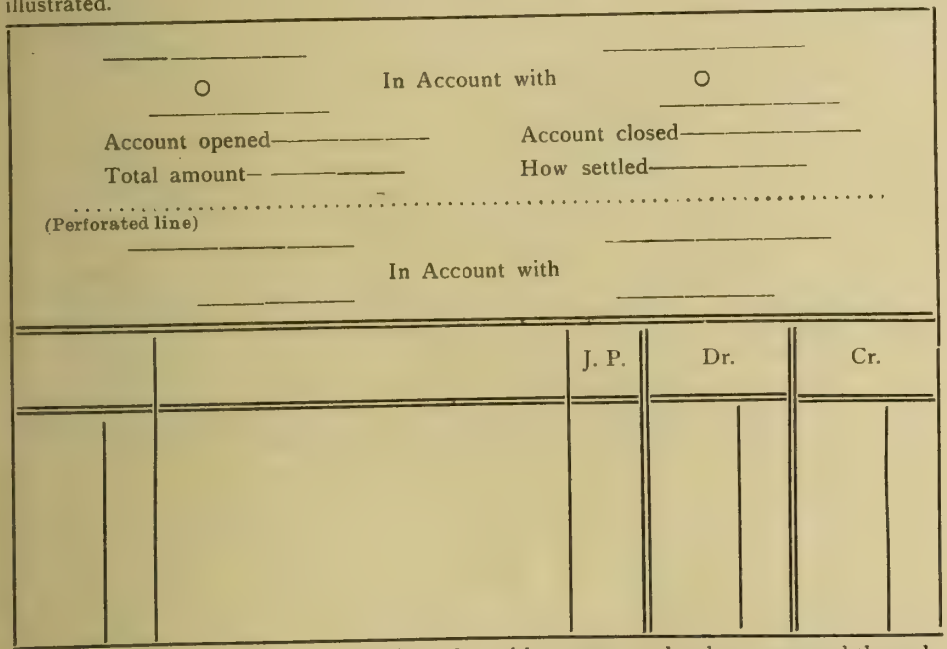
WINDSOR GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The annual meeting of the Windsor Grocers' and Provision Dealers' Association was held in the Manning house parlor on Wednesday evening, the 13th inst. There was a large attendance of the members. The secretary's report showed an increase in the membership of five during the half year of the association's existence, till there was now in Windsor, Walkerville and Sandwich, a total membership of thirty-three. The treasurer's report showed the financial standing of the association to be good with a balance on hand. The following are the officers elect for 1892 :—President, James F. Smyth; vice-president, John Spiers, Sandwich ; secretary, C. G. Davis, re-elected ; treasurer, Alex. Black, re-elected ; guard, Nelson Stevens. Board of directors : Messrs. Pequegnot, Sandwich ; Lajeunesse, Walkerville, and Messrs. Meloche, Hawkins and Chauvin of Windsor. Messrs. Meloche and Chauvin were re-elected to their seat on the board of directors. The board of directors with the five officers of the association form the executive committee and advisory board of the association. They are to meet on Wednesday evening, the 20th inst, at the Manning house and proceed by the 8.30 car to Sandwich, where a business meeting will be held, and the circular sent out from the joint meeting of the Toronto, Hamilton, London, Sarnia, Trenton, Chatham and Simcoe associations in November last at Toronto will be discussed and a report prepared to be laid before a special meeting of the association to be called by the secretary.

Orders have been issued to American express agents in villages and small towns where deliveries are made, to deliver all packages immediately after their arrival. The custom of leaving express packages from late trains in the office over night will thus be abolished. The change has been made on account of recent robberies in small offices.

IMPROVEMENTS IN BOOK-KEEPING

We are accustomed to hear of advances in science, of inventions in manufactures and of improvements in the application of steam and electricity, and yet how startling it is to our old fogy notions when some one gently intimates that book-keeping could be done without books, that is, without bound books. The invoice file is new, yet it has rapidly spread itself over the country, and is now to be found in the office of every well-managed retailer in the Dominion. The card-index is the point in this file which is of greatest importance in application to future improvements. This card-index is used in the system of letter filing now adopted in most large offices. It is also in use in what is called a "petty ledger." This handy little 'book' is like a letter or invoice file with a card-index and ruled sheets, like the pages in a ledger placed between. It is now used for small accounts. The ruled sheet is here illustrated.



When the account is to be settled, and not until then, the upper part is filled in (when the account was opened, when closed, amount, and how settled), and the lower part torn off, receipted, and given to the customer. The advantages are obvious. The accounts are easily found by means of the card-index, the entry in the ledger serves for a ledger account and finally is used as a rendered bill, while the stub serves as a summary of the account. To avoid the filling up of the file consequent upon the placing on of new sheets, the stubs of the others remaining, a sheet might be placed at the bottom of the file, marked 'closed accounts,' and the stubs may then be removed, their substance having been transferred to the last sheet. Of course, a stock of sheets must be always at hand to be placed under any letter, whenever those under that letter are all in use or settled.

The extension of some such system to ordinary ledger-keeping has been accomplished and can easily be carried into practice by any one desiring to do so. Bound ledgers are bulky and hard to handle, and they fill up rapidly because of the amount of dead matter in them, while the number of accounts in actual use may be small. A great deal of labor is required to change the used accounts to a new ledger when the old one has been filled. The plan described above must be modified to suit a large business, and can be modified to suit any business. Some number of files less than twenty-six may be used, marked A, B, C—D, E—F, etc. Then instead of using the card-index on each file for surname it will be used for Christian names, the account being placed on the particular file that bears the letter with which the surname begins. Every ingenious book-keeper can work out this inexpensive method in book-keeping for himself, and in the way best adapted for the business, the records of which are to be kept. Instead of a 'file' with bent wires operating with a spring, as has been assumed throughout in this description, a file made of pasteboard pockets, lettered properly, with an extra pocket for closed accounts, may be used. In this case the stub may be done away with altogether, and the account, when settled, entered in an appropriate list of 'accounts closed.' It may not be necessary to use the ledger account for a rendered bill, but it may be destroyed when its usefulness, as a summary of the transactions, is passed. A case may be made to hold these ledger files in alphabetical order.

This latter plan has been adopted in principle, but varying in detail, by some of the largest firms in the United States, and the system is well worthy of study and careful thought.

A board of trade, with a membership of 24, has been organized in Oakville. It includes the prominent business men of the place, and is starting under very favorable auspices.

PROFIT IN QUICK PAYMENTS.

The question "Are Quick Payments Profitable?" can only be answered in one way. They certainly are, both to the buyer and to the seller. For the buyer a saving of interest, at a high rate easy to be calculated, and for the seller a prompt settlement of the account. This cancels the risk, besides giving him ready money to use in his business. The interesting part of the question is, however, not whether such payments are profitable, but why we do not find more firms taking advantage of them. This opens up nearly the whole of the very large subject of general credits, if not of the conduct of business. At the present time, I will undertake to discuss only that part of the subject which concerns the reasons why discounts are not more often taken, rather than what is to be gained by so doing.

This, as hinted above, carries with it the discussion of methods of business. Lack of capital is perhaps, more often assigned as a reason for inability to discount one's purchases than anything else, and this, to the man who sees no way of increasing his capital, appears an insuperable difficulty. Those persons, however, who have had the pleasure of seeing a large business grow under their hands from very small beginnings, have learned that there are other ways to practically increase capital without actually having ready cash put in from outside sources. This is, perhaps, the portion of the subject which will prove, if not the most interesting, certainly the most valuable to the ordinary retail merchant. Good collecting—the calling in of funds which have for a long time been locked up in outstanding accounts, perhaps some of them being due from what the merchant is in the habit of considering the best class of trade, and which he fears to make much of an effort to collect from, owing to the danger of incurring ill-will and perhaps losing patronage—good collecting, I repeat, is essential. He should remember that there is no money made on the sale until the account is paid, and that over it stands an interest charge which slowly but surely eats up the profit. Often in this best class of accounts are found those which for one reason or another drop into the lower class, and a fair proportion of them are never paid at all. The nearer the seller, who has not an unlimited cash capital, can arrange to do a strictly cash business himself, the more possible it will be for him to do his buying for cash.

Another method of increasing the ready capital at one's command is by turning old stock into cash. There are few stores, if any, in which goods do not accumulate which are not easy to sell. Changes of styles, broken assortment, to say nothing of actual mistakes in buying, all contribute to this end. A certain amount of stock must necessarily be carried, but no matter how carefully this part of the business is looked after, there are accumulated goods which originally cost money, but which it is hard to again turn into it. Every dollar of such stock that is sold furnishes the merchant with a dollar with which to buy goods which can be turned in a short time, thus giving him the cash with which to discount new purchases.

Another cell in which is locked up many a good dollar is that of too large a stock. In these days when most of the business is done by travelling salesmen, who are selected in the main, simply for their ability to sell the most goods, it is not always easy to confine one's purchases within the limit originally dictated by the best judgment. Added to this is the demand which every storekeeper has often had from people coming in every day asking for an article which he has not on his shelves. It is easy at such times to think that if the wished-for article were only in his store, an easy sale and sure profit might have been made. Every one of our most successful business men have, however, learned that there are some sales which it is more profitable to lose than to make, very largely because the profit on an occasional transaction is more than compensated for by the interest on the stock of goods which he would be compelled to carry, and from which he would sell only at rare intervals.

These are only a few of the many methods of increasing an active capital which will suggest themselves to the mind of a man who gives the matter careful thought. The reward which comes to the merchant who conducts his business on a cash basis is so ample that it should stimulate an intelligent effort on the part of those who have heretofore thought it impossible to accomplish. —Ex.

A LONG FELT WANT.

What an interesting work on business vicissitudes could be produced annually by either of the leading commercial agencies in this country if it could afford to devote the time to it. Yet it probably would prove a profitable undertaking, provided the right kind of information were gathered. The annual record of failures is published by both agencies, and one at least prepares later in the year a pamphlet giving a list of the chief causes of mercantile insolvency and the percentage of failures due to each. But what is needed in the work that we have in mind is more detailed information regarding the causes of failures. For instance in the list of "incompetents" as given in the pamphlet mentioned, how many of these unfortunates have owed their business ruin to failure to keep a proper set of books, or to ignorance in buying? And how many of the insolvents who give as a reason for failure bad debts or the credit system, should be properly classed as incompetent dealers? Speculation is alleged as the cause of the downfall of a certain percentage of business men—how many of these, among retail grocers, have suffered from too heavy purchases of "futures" in canned goods and other groceries, or were the speculations of this class of dealers confined to ventures in stocks or "playing horses?' How many business men who fail start in business again, and how many of this number eventually succeed? And how many of this class belong to the retail trade? Do company stores make life a burden for retail merchants in certain sections, or at least does the record of failures in those sections prove that the company is a preventive of success in independent lines? Is the grocery business more hazardous in a pecuniary sense than other branches of the retail trade? Does the percentage of failures in general storekeeping prove that that is a safe or unsafe business for inexperienced men to engage in? These and other conundrums that we have no space for at present await answers. Such a work as we have suggested might yield a good profit to the publishers providing the above questions were answered in its pages.—Merchant's Review.

WHAT CONSTITUTES A SALESMAN.

I have frequently, in the course of a quarter of a century's experience, been asked the question by fathers, wishing to launch their sons in a mercantile career, what constitutes the requisite of a successful retail salesman. The query, like that of the chemical analysis of a glass of water, lager beer, bread, meats, or a hundred other articles of diet, that we all partake of daily, and of which we do not doubt our understanding, is one more easily propounded than precisely answered. There are so many ingredients entering into the grand total of an ideal salesman that an exhaustive category would be equivalent to the task of writing a psychological treatise. Yet in the years of a somewhat close observation I have passed in trade and the views interchanged with others similarly situated, a few deductions may be drawn that will prove of interest and possibly instructive.

It must be premised at the outset that the young man upon entering his business career, must be endowed with common sense and a fair knowledge of language and arithmetic—for with reference to the former it is an axiom that mercantile pursuits develop but never originate, whilst without the latter he is constantly tripping over the stumbling block of mortification.

Equipped with these qualifications, the first aim of every salesman aspiring to ultimate and permanent success is to make a close and careful study of the merchandise he is about to handle. in all its details; to have a master knowledge of the property, not only its name and uses, but its composition, its history and merits, so that in presenting and representing it to a customer he can speak with the freedom and mien born of information of his subject and inspire that confidence in his goods he himself possesses. I find that the pre-disposition of a great many young men, after they have acquired a superficial knowledge of their chosen vocation, a very "smattering," so to speak, is to labor under the delusion that they have graduated, and that there is nothing more to learn. The natural consequence follows, when they come in contact with an obdurate or cynical customer and have exhausted the stock arguments that an article is the latest, and it's nice, and good, and cheap; with the exception of being able to transpire there adjectives, their vocabulary is drained, they close up like an oyster, and nine chances out of ten they are "swopped."

It requires energy and assiduous application to keep "posted," but the end justifies the means; and the end is success. As a corrolary of the foregoing, a retail salesman must be a good "stockkeeper." Next to a complete knowledge of the composition of your stock is that of its arrangement and location.

This is important at all times, but extremely so in busy seasons. In no place is the truism, "time is money," better illustrated than in a retail store.

Goods so disposed that they can be handled at a moment's notice wonderfully facilitates sales; whereas, on the other hand, if the salesman goes moping around rummaging his stock in search of the required article the lynx-eyed customer receives the impression he can not deliver the goods, or is nor "up" in his business—a result equally to be deplored. Keep your stock tastefully arranged, classified and well assorted, giving prominence to whatever you desire to attract particular attention, and when the day of invoice comes you will find your labor well repaid.

Building upon the bed-rock foundations intimated above, the superstructure might be known as the etiquette of the business. This consists of a man's habits, temperament and raiment. Upon such a theme volumes could be written, but this is not the place.

It goes without saying, however, that successful salesmanship and dissipated habits do not go hand in hand. If there is a place on the globe, outside of the pulpit, where a man's brain should be clear, his mind untrammeled, his temper unruffled and his eye clear, that place is behind a retail counter; for no where else is there a more varied or critical audience to humor and please. The midnight hour, the flowing bowl, the deep carousal and the addled brain of the following morning, are not conducive to these conditions. Sooner or latter something will "drop," regardless of a man's other qualifications.

Such habits, moreover, have a tendency to beget carelessness as to personal appearance, slovenliness in dress, as well as curtailing the means of procuring good clothes; and as every business man is aware, the appearance of the outer man is a wonderful adjunct to the skilful salesman.

Numberless minutiæ upon this almost exhaustless subject suggest themselves to my mind in the way of reminiscenes and illustrations of men and occurrences I have met and witnessed, but I will postpone the recital to some future occasion.—E. F. K. in Grocer and Trade Index.

OPINIONS ACCORDANT AND OPINIONS DIFFERENT.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER:

DEAR SIR,—Your editorials on the Patrons of Industry, as well as several letters you have published, are very apropos, and the writers deserve the thanks of the mercantile community. Some little time ago the writer interviewed the merchants here, with a view to freeing the market, and there was a good prospect of success, but to-day the feeling is so strong against the Patrons, not of industry by any means, but the pattons of the extinction of mercantile competition, that any attempt to secure a free market would be useless. We are pleased to hear and observe that the more intelligent and far-seeing portion of the farming community entirely disapprove of the Patron arrangement. The well-known lack of success of co-operative stores, and the natural inference that if A's dollar be worth $1.10 B's is equally valuable, (more especially if he be a larger purchaser than A) whether he be no Patron or the right worshipful master of a Patron lodge, clearly point to a short life for the combination, and the storekeepers who have unwisely agreed to sell to A at 90c. will have to supply B at the some rate, or follow the long, long procession of lapsed merchants.

To change the subject. When you advise grocers to "go out and take orders and drum up new trade," we claim the privilege of protesting against any such degradation of mercantile life, such conditions are a disgrace; the store-circular or newspaper are the reasonable methods and places for extending business, not the residence of the customer, and were this rule rigidly adhered to, it would be much better for the trade in many respects. You must admit the right, not only of every grocer, but of every merchant in every line to go and do likewise. Picture the result. When you say it is worth the grocer's while to follow the example of the fruit pedlar, you give advice which should be repugnant to the feelings of every respectable merchant who reads your article, and we must express our surprise at such ideas appearing in the columns of a paper which we have learned to read with attention and appreciation.

Yours truly,
HAMILTON TEA CO.,
LAING.

[Mr. Laing's approval of our course with reference to the Patrons of Industry movement is encouraging, and we thank him for this and the complimentary words with which he concludes. We are indebted to him also for being the indirect means of our discovering that we have unwittingly done an injustice to a very highly esteemed contemporary. The article he finds fault with was not one of our own, but was clipped from the New York Merchants' Review, the credit, owing to an unfortunate oversight, not having been allowed to the journal to which it belonged. We beg our contemporary's pardon, and are of the opinion that we will be absolved from any suspicion of having been wilfully guilty of doing it or ourselves such a wrong.

As to the practice of calling upon customers, we approve it as a necessary evil. It appears to be the only way the stationary trader has of protecting himself against the pedlar and the producer. It is because we have seen the utter inadequacy of the law to regulate the peddling trade satisfactorily that we commend to the resident merchant the practice of calling for orders. The encroachment of pedlars last year upon the trade of grocers was unusually large in such commodities, as fruits, fish and potatoes. There is no analogy between such calls as we recommend and those of troublesome fakirs. The grocer has his customers. He does not bore them, but he serves them, by calling upon them. The goods he asks orders for are such as the people have to buy in any case, and if he can anticipate the pedlar and crowd him out, he is rendering his own business a service that should outweigh any damage to his dignity that in a theoretical view of this method of trading would seem to be done. Several of the leading grocers in this city look after business in this way. They are expected by their best customers to do so, who to a large extent hold the grocer responsible for keeping himself informed as to their wants. They consider the matter in his hands. He is retained, as it were, to look after them, and if he does not there is likely to be a little pettishness that ends in the transfer of a customer to some other store. The grocer in such cases calls to look after clearly defined wants that he is depended upon to keep filled.

EDITOR.]

A WORD FOR CLERKS.

Good clerks are proven to have been a contributing source to the success of many merchants. While it is advisable and, in fact, the only safeguard to success for anyone starting in business to conduct the same on such a basis as to limit the expenditures within the income, still it is necessary to conduct the same properly and have the necessary help. Many men have started in the grocery business and have failed for this very reason. It should be taken into consideration that whenever a store is opened, the first and most essential thing is the perso nal attention of the proprietor. The next is to leave in the store during the absence of th storekeeper an able and fit representative who in every way is equal as far as the business interests are concerned. Of what benefit will it be to any business to leave a boy there to represent the owner, who can only inform you that "the boss is not in at present; come in some other time?"

Storekeepers should hire at least one competent clerk, who would look to the growth of their business and assist them in building up their trade. It will take but a short time to convince most grocers that they have been laboring under difficulties and disadvantages by not having behind their counters men of sound judgment, instead of boys who are of little use behind the grocery counter. Boys should be hired for the purpose of apprenticeship to give them an opportunity to learn the grocery business, a knowledge of which is very necessary in order to properly conduct the same. Instead of building up a business first and then hiring a clerk, reverse the practice, and it will be found that good clerks will be a great help.

One reason why there are so many stores, and consequently such close competition, is because good men who have been educated and trained in the grocery business cannot find employment, and therefore invest what little money they have in a stock of groceries and launch out as competitors. Whereas, if the generality of storekeepers would turn their attention to hiring able and competent clerks, they would have found employment, and would refrain from entering into competition with others.—San Francisco Retail Grocers' Journal.

A VERY "NEAR" CUSTOMER.

A certain wholesale grocery house here, says the Michigan Tradesman, had a retail customer who buys in such small quantities and acts so penuriously that the house salesmen would as soon see the store invaded by an army of beggars as to be compelled to wait on him. The other day the old fellow dropped in and spent a couple of hours in making his usual selections, including half a dozen cans of a certain kind of canned goods. The latter were placed in his wagon in a case, and a short time afterward the old gentleman appeared at the office with the empty box, when he registered the inquiry:

"You pay 5 cents apiece for empty boxes, don't you?"

On being answered in the affirmative, he replied:

"Well, give me the money. You treat your customers to a cigar, too, don't you?"

The cashier smilingly produced a cheap cigar, when the old man paralyzed the office force with the remark:

"I don't smoke, so give me 5 cents instead."

The cashier laughed until he turned red in the face, when he took the old fellow by the arm, quietly informed him that his patronage was not desired hereafter and led him to the door.

STATESMEN DIFFER.

The following correspondence between Mr. W. A. Munn of the firm Stewart Munn & Co., Montreal, and the Colonial Secretary of Newfoundland has been forwarded to us for publication, and is self-explanitory. Mr. Munn was in St. John's Nfd., at the time of the writing.

ATLANTIC HOTEL, ST. JOHNS, NFLD.
Dec. 30th 1891.

HON. ROBERT BOND,
Colonial Secretary, City,

DEAR SIR,—I now enclose to you a copy of a speech delivered by the Hon. C. H. Tupper, at Toronto, on the 16th inst., and which has had considerable circulation in Canada. Would you kindly favor me with your reply to the following question regarding a statement in the above named speech, and which seems to be the main argument in this speech, and which I believe to be grossly incorrect.

Is he right when he states that in your convention with Mr. Blaine you proposed to shut out Canadian products by placing a discriminating tariff in favor of the United States? If you can give me the statistics of the gross value of the imports and exports between Canada and Newfoundland I will be very pleased, as I intend publishing your reply, and it will disabuse the prevailing feeling that Newfoundland will suffer more than Canada by this tariff fight. Please let me know whether the new tariff which you have lately put in force against Canada will apply to American goods shipped through Canada in bond for Newfoundland. The bulk of the flour trade with this colony is shipped from Montreal, and it will make very little difference to Newfoundland merchants whether the flour is Canadian or American (as they can always be had at the same price) if the goods can only be forwarded be the cheapest route. An early reply will oblige,

Your humble servant,
W. A. MUNN.

Colonial Secretary's Office,
St. Johns, Newfoundland, Jan. 4, 1892.

Sir, I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 30th ultimo enclosing an extract from what purports to be a report of a speech delivered by the Hon. Charles H. Tupper, the Canadian Minister of Marine and Fisheries, at Toronto, on the 16 ultimo; and asking if the statement contained in said extract is correct. Also, whether the duty at present collected upon Canadian goods will apply to American goods shipped through Canada in bond for Newfoundland.

Reffering to the extract aforesaid which is as follows, namely :—"Under the Bond-Blaine negotiations it was proposed to shut out our flour and our products of the Western part of Canada out of that market, and to impose a tariff discriminating in favor altogether of the goods and products of a foreign country, the United States of America." I hesitate to believe that the Hon. Mr. Tupper deliberately asserted that which he knew to be untrue, yet, I can only say that if he did make the statement contained in what purports to be a report of his speech at Toronto on the 16th ultimo, it was contrary to the facts and for which no possible excuse can be forthcoming. "The Bond-Blaine negotiations" did not propose to shut "out Canadian flour and the products of the Western parts of Canada from Newfoundland," neither did it propose a tariff discriminating "in favor of the goods and products of a foreign country, the United States of America." When a similar statement was forwarded by the Canadian Cabinet to Her Majesty's Government as the justification of its unwarrantable interference with the Newfoundland negotiations, this colony at once intimated to the Imperial and Canadian Governments that such a contingency was not contained in the proposed convention or contemplated by the government of this colony. As a member of the Canadian Cabinet the Hon. Mr. Tupper must have been aware of this even if his own interpretation of the "negotiations" had led him into error, hence my unwillingness to believe that he made the untruthful statement that has been attributed to him.

In reply to your query as to the amount of our imports from and exports to Canada, I beg to say that the Blue Book for 1890 gives the imports from Canada as equal to $2,400,000, and the exports from this colony to Canada as equal to $600,000.

With reference to American goods shipped through Canada in bond for Newfoundland, the additional tariff to which you refer will not apply to such.

I have the honor to be Sir,
Your most obedient humble servant,
R. BOND, Colonial Secretary.

To Wm. A. Munn Esq., care Messrs. Stewart, Munn & Co., Montreal, Canada.

WHAT BREAKS MEN DOWN.

One of the features of American business life about which men are compelled to think when they have time, says the Galveston News, but of which certainly those who know and feel it most cannot be expected to write, is the irregularity with which the strain of mental and accompanying physical exertion falls upon them. Business comes with a rush and for some months those in positions of responsibility and greatest usefulness are compelled by circumstances to wrestle with figures, facts and circumstances at a rate and during an extended day, the result of which must be to wreck the nerves of the strongest and most determined who undertake to do their duty if in employment, or to keep their heads above water if in the swim for themselves. There is no patent method for reforming this under the actual conditions, but the thought that able men are being worn out too quickly by the system will suggest that where a saving of time can be effected no routine should be adhered to that is not strictly necessary to safety and efficiency. Another thing is that as service becomes more valuable by experience in a place, those whose business which can by care in management be shaped to employ a steady and adequate personnel by the year will gain something in the course of time by making the endeavour intelligently. Other points are that all facilities to bring busy men to and from their places of business are of increasing importance as to saving that time which would be devoted to rest and meals. The motherly housekeeper, also, needs to be aware that upon her devolves no small portion of responsibility for the health of the toiling man. It is business rush and worry that breaks men down more than manual labor ever did. The temperance advocates, too, may stop and think that they have to deal with causes, and that often, indeed, the habit of taking stimulants to success is merely a result of business pressure. On the other hand, enforced idleness is as bad morally, while less injurious in its direct physical results. Overwook and strain fall upon the clerk and bookkeeper as upon the manager, but on the former classes the blight of no work at all is more likely to fall. While apparently small safeguards are all that can at present be practically suggested, it should not be forgotten that safeguards, in appearance small, are often sure and effective. It should be in the power of every reasonable man at least to banish worry; to attend closely to what is presented, decide promptly, press forward serenely and care nothing for consequences while doing what seems best in the time which nature allows for work. A good strong resolution in competently managing men, when they are able to take leisure and save health, to do so, no matter if it costs much in money, would be very wise and would have a wholesome effect in making places for others and in compelling corporations to seek their interest in a reasonable conservation of the health of their capable employes.

LONDON RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The regular meeting of the above association was held in Sherwood hall on Wednesday, Jan. 13th, with the President, Mr. W. H. Ferguson in the chair. The meeting opened at 8 p.m.

The minutes of last meeting were confirmed as read.

A communication from a merchant in Melville was read asking what action was being taken by this association respecting the peddling of goods, stating that they had found it a nuisance in that part of the country and thought united action should be taken by the different associations and merchants generally to see that a license fee be imposed, as very few of the pedlars pay taxes or even do statute labor to the extent of more than from $1.50 to $5 per year, and license fees are practically evaded.

It was moved and seconded that a reply be sent stating that the different associations were considering the best means to be employed to suppress peddling, or impose a fee equal in proportion to the taxes paid by merchants.

Under the head of "Remarks in the interest of the Association" the Patrons of industry were discussed, some of the members stating that they understood that the patrons had been interviewing some of the grocers of this city asking for tenders to supply them with groceries. It was the feeling of the members present that the patrons should not be sold goods on any different terms than those of general customers, and groceries are already being sold at the closest living profit, and any extra inducement savors of dishonest dealing, generally speaking.

Some other matters of local interest were discussed and disposed of and the meeting closed at 10 p. m. to meet again on Feb. 10th.

Prince Edward County has exported over 100,000 bushels of buckwheat to Germany this season, for which they have received an average price of 50 cents per bushel. This is a handsome return to that county.

The magnitude of the output of the E. B. Eddy Co.'s match factory at Hull would be a good competitive guessing problem, only that it is so large the guesses would all fall on the under side. This factory turns out 27,360,000 matches every day. These goods must have a huge share of the consumption that goes to matches in this country.

At the annual meeting of the shareholders of the Ogilvie Milling Company, held in Winnipeg, the following directers were elected for the ensuing year:—Messrs. W. W. Ogilvie, Shirley Ogilvie, A. T. Ogilvie, and F. W. Thompson. Officers subsequently elected were:—Messrs. W. W. Ogilvie, vice-president; F. W. Thompson, general manager; W. A. Black, secretary. It is understood that the reported results of the business for the past year were highly satisfactory.

GROCERIES.

The weather has at last taken a spell of decision, and it is to be hoped it will be a steady one throughout the remainder of the winter. With the thermometer down about zero and plenty of snow on the roads there is reason to expect that the movement of grain from farmers' barns to elevators and railway stations will be very general. If the hauling of grain were once more set going over the country, the effect of it upon trade would be immediate and powerful. It may require more than hard weather and snow, however to bring out the grain; prices may have to improve before the farmers will sell freely. But the equivalent of the grain in money would supply the stimulus now wanting in trade, and it is to be hoped that it will soon be circulating. Trade this week has been fully up to expectations. The orders have been more liberal than they usually are at this time of vear. Tea continues to be the largest part of the invoices sent out. Otherwise the orders are of a sorting up description. The week has not been fertile of changes. No new stock, except a few prunes, has been received. Prices are of an easier tendency on staples, yellow sugar, currants and Malaga raisins quoting generally lower. There seems to be enough money for fragments as but little grumbling is heard about backwardness in remittance.

CANNED GOODS.

The output has been small. Prices are generally steady at the quotation which has been ruling for a long time, that is $1.05 for round assorted lots of vegetables. There are brands obtainable, however, at $1, but strictly first-class goods are quite firm at the higher figure. Peas appear to be as scarce as the evidence of indications now more than a month old has led everybody to suppose they were. Packers have been called upon to forward more, but most of them agree in the answer that they have not a case left. The quotation for peas alone is $1.10. The prices of all fruits are steady and the trade dull. In salmon and lobster the usual limited business proceeds uneventfully at unchanged prices. There is some rumor of a combine among the salmon canners of the Fraser.

COFFEES.

This market shares very little in the ups and downs of Rio coffee in the large distributing centres. This present week in New York is marked by a continuance of the equal strife for advantages between buyer and seller, and the issue inclines now one way, now the other. Here prices are unchanged and business is small in volume. This applies to all descriptions.

DRIED FRUIT.

Currants are easier, as quotations from outside led buyers last week to expect they would be. Provincials in barrels quote from as low as 5½c. Valencia raisins range from 5c, for last crop off-stalk goods, selected are from 7c upwards and layers are 7 to 8c. There is more Malaga fruit on the market this week, but it is not divided up, being mostly in the hands of one holder. The prices of it are easier in the more staple descriptions and higher in the choice lines. Figs have not been in much request since the year opened. The stock on hand is a small one. Prunes are being quoted to arrive at 6¾ to 7c. for U, the only grade of the Sphinx brand now on the way. Already a few Atlas prunes have been received and are held at the following prices: for A 8½c., for B 8c., for C 7½c., for D 6¾c. Old case prunes are steady at 5½ to 6¼c. There is this year more California evaporated fruit on this market than there ever was before. The prices are: 12½ to 14c for apricots, 12 to 13c. for peaches, 12¾ to 14c for nectarines.

NUTS.

The call for nuts is a very light one. A few Grenoble and Bordeaux walnuts are asked for but the parcels moving out are small and not numerous. Prices have eased materially in New York. A very small business is all that can be looked for from this out. Stocks are light.

RICE AND SPICES.

Rice is quiet and featureless. Orders are far apart in the procession of calls for stock, and are for very small parcels. Spices are dull, with quotations standing at points marked last week.

Foreign mail advices just received from Yokohama, says the New York Daily Commercial, note that the occurrence of violent gales which swept over the country when the grain was ripening, has resulted in a disappointment in regard to expectations for the rice crop. The total of the early, middle, and late crops is returned as 34,464,280 koku, and and as an average yield is 34,257,000 koku, last year's yield shows an excess of only 206,880 koku, above the average. According to one native paper, the yield for 1891 has been only 31,378,234 koku, a quantity considerably below the average. In consideration of the deficiency in the rice crop of Burmah and other important sources of rice supply, the disappointment in Japan is considered quite important in relation to the international market, as well as in connection with trade prospects in Japan in particular.

SUGAR.

Sugar buying is not at its best these days. The Canadian market is not lacking in firmness, though an easier tone in New York is one of the features of the week. As usual with downward movements in that market the significance attached to this change is the desire to lay in supplies of raw and to bear the market accordingly. Our refiners are steady in their firmness for current prices, and bids for big orders do not affect their quotations materially. Locally, some jobbers go as low as 3½c. for yellows, others will sell at 3.55c., but the majority want 3⅝c. Granulated is unchanged and quiet at 4⅞ to 5c.

Willett & Gray, New York, in their Weekly Sugar Statistical say:

Raws—The market has been quiet during the week. There has been no news of importance from any direction to influence it either way. Further reductions in the beet crop are not now looked for as much as they were, and to this extent the market is in favor of buyers. Cuba sugars are also more freely offered, which, taken in connection with the condition of the refined market as to prices, is also in favor of buyers, and a slightly easier market may result, particularly as values of raws are considerably higher than at the opening of crops last year. The action of the American Sugar Refining Company yesterday, if put into force by purchase of competing refineries, will also have an important influence in keeping raw sugar at low prices.

Refined—The demand not proving sufficient to keep refiners free of accumulation, another break in prices resulted, back to the former low point of 3.92c. net cash for granulated. With centrifugals at 3½c., a loss of 10c per 100 lbs, or 30c. per barrel results to refiners on basis of their report for 1891, given elsewhere in the paper. Buyers can decide as well as we whether this fact has any bearing on the immediate future of refined, taken in connection with what we say about raws. We may add that at the reduced prices the demand for refined increases, and some grades of softs show a hardening tendency.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.

The week's sales of syrups have amounted to a very good aggregate. The prices rule as low as ever, with stocks well supplied with low-grade United States syrup.

Molasses has also had a comparatively good week of it. In New Orleans molasses the trading has been largest. Values run from 30 to 55c.

TEAS.

Low stocks in the country and good value obtainable from jobbers are causing a marked increase in the orders, both as to the number of them and the quantity of tea they each call for. There has not been for a long time so steady a run of fair-sized sales. Medium-priced teas preponderate in buying favor. A better supply of low grade Young Hyson would promote trade, as for that variety a smart demand is just now heard from. Japans and blacks at 23 to 30c. sell particularly well.

McMeekin & Co., in their notes on Indian and Ceylon teas for the month of December, say:

The offerings of Indian were 109,000 packages, against 103,000 packages in the same month of 1890. The supplies during the first week were fully equal to the demand, and common teas were slightly lower, but the offerings falling off, and a large business being transacted in the country, more spirit was evinced in the biddings at auction. Prices have gradually hardened, and in many cases show a rise of fully 1d. per lb. in the lower grades, and 1d. to 2d. per lb. on good liquoring teas. The sales closed for the year with a very firm tone. The low range of prices has induced buyers in the country to hold more stock than usual, and it is not probable that the market will continue so firm. The quality of the teas offering towards the end of the month shows an improvement, and some specially fine teas from Darjeeling and Assam have realized very full prices. This has also contributed to the improvement in prices, together with the knowledge that we are not likely to receive more for the remainder of the season than last year. The average of public sale prices for the month was 8¾d. per lb., the same price as in November. The imports were 14,416,000 lbs., and the deliveries 9,284,000 lbs., leaving in stock on 31st Dec. 45,496,000 lbs. The offerings of Ceylon were 47,700 packages, against 28,700 packages in the same month of 1890. The demand has continued good throughout the month, and prices have slowly advanced. Pekoe Souchongs and Pekoes show a rise of ½d. per lb., and Broken Pekoes 1d per lb. The average of public sale prices was 9¾d. per lb. for the corresponding month last year. The imports were 4,756,000 lbs. and the deliveries 4,283,000 lbs., leaving in stock on 31st Dec. 13,440,000 lbs. China teas have been more in request, and prices have advanced in sympathy with Indian and Ceylon teas. Java teas are not much in demand, owing to the low range of prices ruling for Indian and Ceylon teas.

PETROLEUM.

The price is steady and the volume of trade about the same as it was a week ago, Canadian refined quoting at 15c. Empties are unchanged at 65c.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.29 per bbl., Oil Springs crude $1.29. The past week has been very quiet on the crude oil market. The price of crude oil on going to press is $1.29, two cents lower than over last week's quotations. Refined oil can be purchased all the way from 11 to 12½c. according to customers and terms.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The position of the butter market has been the same for several weeks. Large rolls with pretensions to classification in the highest grades abound, but the majority of them have to be sold at the prices ruling for medium stock. An occasional lot rises to the standard of merit which brings 17c. and 18c., but the representative range for ordinary large roll butter is 14 to 16c. For very choice dairy tub 18c. is easily obtainable. This is very scarce. Really prime butter would develop rather than bring down prices if it were to be had in quantities. Low grade stock at 11 to 13c. also commands sale these days, a very considerable quantity having been taken for eastern consumption. The movement of creamery stock continues very limited from this market, though a very considerable revival has been awakened in the English market for both Canadian creamery and choice western dairy.

Cheese is firm at 11 to 11¼c. for fine fall makes. Early summer stock is easy and out of demand at 9½ to 10c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES.—Buyers are not eager for stock either to store or ship at once. There is just at the present time nothing to be made out of exportation. Prices have a wide range on spot, $1.50 to $2.50.

BEANS.—There is very little life in the market. A few small parcels sell out at $1.40 to $1.50, but $1.20 to $1.30 are the prices for car lots.

CRANBERRIES.—Prices are easier at $7 to $7.50, with stock plentiful and demand inactive.

DRIED APPLES Odd small lots are moving into buyers' hands here at 4 to 4¼c. outside, and 4¼ to 4½c. here. The easier market for green is causing a relaxing of the views that prevailed among country holders as to the value of their stock, and offering is freer.

EVAPORATED APPLES—No sales of any magnitude have been reported. Prices are nominal at 6½ to 8c., according to quantity.

EGGS—The market is moderately well supplied with fresh stock at 18c., and limed are plentiful at 14 to 15c.

GAME—Rabbits are scarcely salable at 10c. a pair.

HIDES—The hide market makes no progress. Green cows' run from 4½c. downward from No. 1, with a cent off for each of the two lower grades. Steers' are half a cent higher. Buffs are 5 to 5¼c. on car.

HONEY—Choice extracted is worth 10c, and there are grades as low as 7c. Sections range from 13 to 17c., the uppermost quotation being for very fancy stock.

HOPS—Transactions are rare just now, but the condition of the market warrants sellers in holding out for 18 to 22c., for the various grades now offering.

ONIONS—Are dull and unchanged at $2.25 to $2.50 per barrel.

POULTRY—The scarcity of fine stock is a check to trade. Even very common stock, though not in demand, is not accumulating on account of the backwardness of the supply. Good turkeys are worth 10c, geese are scarce at 7 to 8c, chickens are worth 40 to 80c.

POTATOES—Buyers are scarce and sellers quite eager and numerous. Some car lots have been taken at 35c. Out of store lots are 50c and dull at that.

SEEDS—The deliveries this week have been freer as befits the weather we are having. The quantity of alsike in the country is large, but the quality does not rule high. The range of prices is $6 to $6.75. Exceptional cases of lower and higher figures are reported. Red clover sells at $5.50 to $5.90

MARKETS—Continued.

SKINS—Sheepskins now sell on their merit, rather than on their name as sheepskins, the quotation having been pretty uniform for all classes till a dollar was reached. Ordinary good skins are worth $1, but superior skins range upwards, with inferior skins quoting downward. Calf skins are 5 to 7c.

TALLOW—A very quiet business at old prices—2c. for rough and 5½ to 5¾c. for refined—continues to be done.

WOOL—Nothing has appeared to reclaim this commodity from the dulness in which it has lain for months. Fleeces are 19c., pulled is 21 to 21½c. for ordinary and 25 to 27c. for extra.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

Sellers are impressing their views upon the market, as prices have gone up for hogs and offerings are far from free. A few cars of selected weights of western hogs have sold this week at $5.75, and northern selected hogs have been taken at $5.50. Even these prices do not stimulate offering, the weather now favoring holders. All products are firmer in sympathy with higher prices for the raw material.

BACON—Long clear is firm at 7½ to 7¾c., backs at 10½c., bellies at 10c., rolls at 8¾c.

HAMS—The price has hardened but not advanced, 10½ to 11c. remaining the quotation.

LARD—Pure is 9½ to 9¾c., compound is dull at 8½ to 8¾c.

BARREL PORK—has undergone no change, $13.75 to $14.25 going for heavy mess and $15.50 to $16 for short cut.

FRESH MEATS—Sales are active at 4¼ to 6c. for beef in the fore quarter and 7½ to 8½c. in the hindquarter, 7½ to 8½c. for lamb, 6 to 7c. for mutton and 7 to 8½c. for new veal.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Oysters have risen, being quoted at $1.30 to $1.35, with select at $1.60 to $1.70. Even at these prices they are scarce. Mackerel, smelts, and flounders have appeared on the fish market this week. Prices Current show various changes in the prices of dried and salt fish. The trade in fresh fish is still quiet, and prices are easy, but pickled white fish has advanced owing to the strong demand. Mackerel 10 to 12c. per lb. ; Smelts 7c. per lb. ; Flounders 5c. per lb.

SALT.

Barrel salt has advanced 5c. a barrel, and at this price the demand is strong, several carloads having been moved at the advance. It is probable that the price may attain the height attained last spring. Other classes of salt are quiet with prices almost unchanged. Trade in small lots is brisk.

GREEN FRUIT.

Malaga lemons are out of stock. New Palermo lemons have just come in time to take the place left vacant by Malagas. Palermos are $4 to $4.50, and are good stock this year. Messinas are at $4 to $5. In New York prices are stiffer, and there is an immense demand all over for lemons for la grippe patients. Oranges are higher, Florida stock having to be repacked on account of the wasty conditions in which they arrive. Valencias are plentiful and of better quality than they were. Bananas are scarce in low demand at $1.50 to $2.50. Pineapples are unchanged.

DRY GOODS.

The trade in winter goods is somewhat brisker than might be expected, and such goods as flannels, blankets, etc., are selling very well. The prospects for a good spring trade are brightening. As the stock of the retailer lessens, so his capacity to buy a larger stock for the next season increases. Money is moving freely and will ease the strain of Feb. 4th.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Jan. 21, 1892.

Business in groceries since our last letter has not shown any material change, but indications point to favorable trade in the near future. Travellers for the jobbing houses have just gone out, so that reports from them are not full, but if some sorting up orders are any criterion, a movement fully equal if not superior to that of last season may be expected. Values with a few exceptions show a higher tendency, sugar being a notable example in this connection. The refiners, owing to the firm tendency of raw material, are operating very cautiously, so that although buyers are well disposed, business is not large. In teas a satisfactory movement in gun powders, ranging 13 to 22 cts, is a favorable feature, but the somewhat irregular methods adopted by large dealers who hold large lots of consigned Japan stock, and are jobbing it out in small quantities in competition with regular jobbers, is causing complaint. In other lines there is nothing special to note except free offering of inferior quality of Valencia raisins, which are begging sale at almost any price, and unsettling the market. Green fruit and canned goods are firm, especially the latter.

SUGAR.

The week has been a fairly active one in sugars, but the refiners are operating very cautiously on account of the firm position of the raw material, which, high as it is, gives indications that it may go higher. There have been transactions in yellows at the advance, a fair quantity in the aggregate being turned over at 3½ to 4 3-16c. Granulated is firm at the old figure, 4½c.

Agents for the beet sugar refineries speak of increasing orders, both for raw and granulated. A round quantity of the latter was moved from first hands since our last, at a figure somewhere around 4½c. Raw beet is quoted about 3¼c.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are moving quietly under a very slow demand, both for the American and Canadian product. We quote American 25c. and Canadian 28 to 30c.

Molasses very quiet and dull, a small jobbing movement in Barbadoes being all there is to note, on a basis of 36c.

TEAS.

The tea market on the whole is quiet, and there are complaints from jobbers that the importers of consigned lots of Japan stock are cutting prices. The former bought pretty freely of this description of stock, and now find that they have to compete with the latter to secure their own customers. This is hardly a legitimate operation, but a large quantity of this consigned stock in first hands no doubt makes the holders anxious to realize. There is not much activity to note in black and green stock. Still the latter has encountered fair call, gunpowder ranging from 13½ to 22c furnishing a fair turnover.

COFFEE.

Coffee is dull, but firm under extremely light supplies, and for the sorting up trade that is doing buyers are paying full figures,

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO, Jan. 22, 1892.

The dullness in the flour trade is as monotonous this week as it was last, hardly a sale of any considerable size being visible on the horizon of the market. An evidence that the millers are loaded up close to the full capacity of their storage, is the fact that they are consigning just now, shipments having gone forward to Maritime Province points, and one or two having been sent over sea. The market has been without exciting influences with the exception of rumors of trouble between Chili and the United States, which caused an advance of 1c. in the price of wheat. Local business in flour is moderately good. Feed is dull and pointing downward in value.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are : Manitoba patents, $5.25 ; strong bakers', $4.85 ; Ontario patents, $5 ; straight roller, $4.75 ; extra, $4.10 to $4.15 : low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are : Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.30 to $5.60 ; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.90 to $5.10 ; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90 ; straight roller, $4.10 to $4.15 ; extra, $3.95 to $4 ; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL—A very moderate output is reported but at prices that are well maintained. Oatmeal is $3.90 to $4.25, the lower value being for cars. Cornmeal is $3.80 to $4.25.

FEED—Bran is $15 per ton, but the price is weak, purchases being reported possible at $13 on track. Shorts are $16 to $17 and also weak. Mixed feed is $23 to $25, cracked corn $1.25, feeding corn 54 to 55c. in cars and 60c. in smaller lots, oats are easier at 33c.

HAY—Good timothy is firm at $12 to $12.50. Mixed hay is in better demand at $10.50 to $11.

STRAW—Oat straw commands fairly ready sale at $6 to $6,50.

MONTREAL.

Expectations of flour dealers that good roads in the country would improve trade have not been fully realized, and there is still only a jobbing business to note. Prices although not quotably changed have an easier tendency. We quote, Patent spring, $5 to $5.35; patent winter, $5 to $5.25; straight roller, $4.65 to $4.75 : extra, $4.30 to $4 35 ; superfine, $4 to $4.10; city strong bakers', $5 to $5.10; strong bakers', $4.80 to $4.90.

Oatmeal is dull with a small hand to mouth trade doing on the old basis. We quote, Standard, per bag, $2.10 to $2.20 ; granulated, $2.10 to $2.20 ; rolled, $2.10 to $2.20.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

FLOUR—We cannot note any change in the amount of flour moving, as the roads are in such a condition it is about impossible to do any hauling. What is selling is purely local, with prices slightly easier. Manitoba is quoted $5.90 to $6, Ontario High Grade $5.20 to $5.30, Medium Patents $4.95 to $5.10.

CORNMEAL—There has been a steady demand for meal during the past week, the market is slightly easier and lower prices will probably be given in the near future Quotations are $2.90 to $3.

OATMEAL—There is a steady market with sufficient for all requirements. Present prices are: Roller, $4.65 to $4.75; Standard, $4.60 to $4.70.

FEED—There is a fair demand for shorts, which is selling from $21.50 to $23 per ton Oats are 42 to 45c. per bushel. Hay is very scarce at present, owing to the poor condition of roads.

and would no doubt be open to place much larger orders were the supply greater. We quote :—Rios, 15 to 20c.; Java, 26 to 30c.; Mocha, 27 to 30c.; Jamaica, 18 to 20c.; and Maracaibo, 23 to 25c.

RICE.

The rice market is dull and unchanged. There is only a small jobbing business doing. We quote :—Patna, $4.50 to $5; Japan, $4.75 to $5; standard, $3.90, and off grades, $3.50, all in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

The dried fruit market is dull and quiet; free offerings of inferior stock by representatives of New York people are unsettling the market somewhat. In fact the stock is almost begging a sale, the following being an instance of how it is offered : A wholesaler was offered a line of stock first at 4c. then 3¾ and finally at 3¾c, but the stock was of such a nature that he would not have it at any price. For good stock, therefore prices are not quotably changed, but there is nothing doing, and the jobbers who loaded up pretty freely have cause for complaint, as their chances for business are interfered with. However, we quote prime Valencias 5 to 5¼c. Currants rule firm and unchanged at 5¼ to 6c for Patras, and 7 to 8c. for Vostizzas in cases.

NUTS.

There is only a small jobbing trade in nuts, which show no change. We quote :—Walnuts steady at 12¾ to 13c., for Grenoble and 10½ to 11c. for Bordeaux ; Toicos, 12 to 13.; Tarragona almonds, 14 to 15c.

CANNED GOODS.

There is no particular business to note in canned goods, but the tendency of values is firmer, especially for fruits, and jobbers are more disposed towards ordering in this line than formerly. Fish also show a stronger tendency, recent advices from the coast in regard to salmon being much firmer. In vegetables, also, the feeling in staple lines is stronger, and the canned goods market as a whole may be set down as much firmer, which requires only some movement to develop into an actual advance.

GREEN FRUIT.

Green fruit is dull with only a small jobbing trade to note. Valencia oranges rule unchanged at $3.75 to $4 for 420's, and $4.25 to $4.50 for 714's in cases. Florida oranges show a fair degree of activity, ruling steady at $3 to $3.50 in boxes. Lemons are unchanged with only a small business at $3.50 per box. Cranberries run from $6 to $6.50 per barrel.

APPLES.

There is a small jobbing business in apples at steady prices. We quote $2.50 to $3 per bbl. Dried and evaporated fruit are controlled by one firm here, who are holding for 5 to 6c. and 8 to 9c. respectively.

FISH.

The fish market is not active, and with the weather experienced lately dealers do not anticipate a long lenten season, and are acting in accordance. There is little to note therefore in the way of business either in the wholesale or jobbing way. Some fresh trout are coming in and meet with a slow movement at $4 50 to $4.75, while white fish are offering at $6.25. Advices from the Maratime provinces do not furnish anything of interest except that the stock of cod is small

HOPS.

There is nothing doing in hops, which continue firm. Bulk stock are held stiff under a light supply at a wide range, 18 to 25c. There have been speculative dickers in pressed hops, and some round lots have changed hands on this account within the week.

PROVISIONS.

Owing to the firmness of dressed hogs, which are now selling at $6 per cwt. in car lots, the price of Canada short cut has advanced to $15.50 and $16. A great improvement is reported in business, therefore, dealers placing their orders freely in anticipation of a still further advance. Dressed hogs are not coming in as expected. We quote :—Canadian short cut, per brl. $15.50 to $16.00; mess pork, western, per brl. $13.50 to $14.00 ; short cut, western, per brl. $15.75 to $16; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c; bacon, per lb. 9c. to 10c ; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¼ to 8c.

CHEESE.

Cheese is unmistakably strong at an advance of ¼c. on the prices we quoted last week. This advance is due to various causes, the most influential being free buying on behalf of some operators who were short for delivery in the last half of January. The strength of the situation also induced speculative operations, both the causes resulting in the turnover of a round quantity of stock anywhere from 10,000 to 15,000 cheeses at 11 to 11⅜c., and we quote the market stiff with a higher tendency at 11¼ to 11½c. The Liverpool cable is a shilling higher than a week ago at 56s.

BUTTER.

Butter remains firm and quiet. Supplies are small and prices firm, holders jobbing out their stock both of creamery and dairy at full figures for local wants. There is demand for export for both descriptions, but the cost precludes the idea of business. We quote:—Finest creamery, 24 to 24½c.; finest Townships, 18 to 20c.; Morrisburg and Brockville, 18 to 19c: finest Western, 16½ to 18½c.

EGGS.

The egg market continues steady, and prices are unchanged. Round lots are still moving at 15 to 16c., but 17c. is obtainable for single cases of choice stock.

POULTRY, ETC.

There is no change in poultry. We quote: Turkeys 9 to 10c., chickens 6 to 8c., fowls 5 to 6c., geese 5 to 6c., ducks 8 to 9c.

GRAIN.

The grain market is precisely as it was a week ago, and there is positively no business doing. Prices are nominal. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago show a decrease of 21,264 wheat, 8,040 peas, 11,404 oats, and an increase of 49,478 barley, and 1,192 rye. Compared with last year stocks there is an increase of 200,002 wheat, 83,482 peas, 155,124 barley. and a decrease of 76,467 oats, and 11,138 rye. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04 ; peas, 75 to 76c. per 66 pounds; oats, 35c. to 36c. per 34 pounds in store, corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 48 to 50c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, Jan. 21, 1892.

BREADSTUFFS—The present is essentially a dull season. We think in the whole course of our business experience we have scarcely seen anything to match it. The weather has been so soft that winter operations could not be carried on in the usual way, consequently trade has been very dull.

We may look for improvement in prices and a steady gain all through the spring months. We make no changes in our quotations.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $5.75 to 6.00 ; High grade patents, $5.10 to 5.20 ; Good 90 per cent Patents, $4.90 to 5.00 ; Straight grade, $0.00 to 4.80; Good seconds, $0.00 to 4.40 ; Graham flour, $0.00 to 5.60 ; Oatmeal, $0.00 to 4.15 ; Rolled wheat, $5.55 ; Wheat bran per ton, $20.00 to $21.00; Middlings, $00 00 to $26.50 ; Shorts, $00.00 to $22.50.; Moulee, $24.00 to $28.50 ; Split Peas $0.00 to $4.10; White beans per bushel, $1.50 to 1.53 ; Pot Barley per bbl, $3.90 to $4.50 ; Canadian oats, choice quality, 43c. to 45c. ; P. E. I. oats 41 to 45c.

SUGAR—Last Saturday our local refineries advanced prices ⅛c. to ¼c., and still further advances are spoken of as necessary owing to the very firm attitude of the raw article.

Cut loaf, 5⅝c.; Granulated, 4⅝. to 4⅞c; Circle A, 4½c.; White extra C, 4⅜c.; Standard, 3⅞c. to 3⅞c ; Extra Yellow C, 3⅝c.; Yellow C, 3½c.

MOLASSES.—Barbados 35c. ; Demerara 35 to 38c. ; Diamond N. 48c. ; Porto Rico 34 to 35c. ; Trinidad 32½ to 38c. ; Antigua 33 to 34c.

FISH—There is nothing new to report regarding the local fish situation, which remains as dull as possible for it to be. There is absolutely no life at all manifested in this line.

Several of the Toronto wholesale grocery houses are interested in the assignment of Geo. E. Hawes & Co., Victoria, B.C. They owe $7.000, with assets nominally $4,000.

George E. Forsyth & Co., the wholesale grocers of Halifax, are offering 50 cents on the dollar, with liabilities reaching $100,000. If this is not accepted the whole estate will be wound up.

Scott & Co., general storekeepers, Coboconk, Ont., have convened a meeting of their creditors which will be held at the offices of Henry Barber & Co., assignees and accountants, of Toronto.

The failure of the Ruthven Wigles is attributed to the insolvency of J. Birrell & Co., of London, but they have also been too free with their credits, and have managed to run up book accounts to the tune of $15,000.

Messrs. Hendry & Williamson, wholesale grocers, Montreal, have made a private assignment, Messrs. Pease, of the Merchants' Bank of Halifax, and Rose, of Messrs. Caverhill, Rose, Hughes & Co., being appointed trustees, and Mr. Hendry liquidator. Liabilities $30,000.

Hood, Mann & Co., wholesale dealers in china, etc., Montreal, have assigned at the instance of Fred. D. Lawrence, who is their creditor for $36,533. The liabilities of the insolvent firm are $96,400, of which $26,000 is indirect. The other creditors are in England and New York.

Walter Woods & Co., wholesale woodenware merchants, of Hamilton, have convened a meeting of their creditors. The firm is commercially regarded as one of the most reputable in the province, and its present misfortune is attributed almost entirely to accumulated bad debts. The Bank of Hamilton is largely interested in the failure, but it is thought that an arrangement will be possible by which the business may be continued as before.

CERTIFICATES OF STRENGTH AND PURITY.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST,

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar-Refining.

The test by the Polariscope showed in yesterday's yield 99·90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

JOHN BAKER EDWARDS, P.L.D., D.C.L., F.C.S.,

Public Analyst for the District of Montreal, and Professor of Chemistry.

CHEMICAL LABORATORY, MEDICAL FACULTY, McGILL UNIVERSITY.

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Company:

GENTLEMEN,—I have taken and tested a sample of your "EXTRA GRANULATED" Sugar, and find that it yielded 99·88 per cent. of Pure Sugar. It is practically as pure and good a Sugar as can be manufactured.

Yours truly,

G. P. GIRDWOOD.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The independent retail traders of the country have a right to object to their wholesalers doing business with Patron store-keepers. Their objection is not based on any tolerance they expect from wholesalers; it is based on a rule of trade that the wholesalers profess to be bound by. That rule is, that they do not sell to consumers. In selling to Patron merchants they violate the principle of this rule, for the Patron merchant is nothing but a consumers' broker, bound to buy for an association of consumers on a commission of 12½ per cent. upon the money invested. He is simply the agent of the people who ultimately get the goods, and as such, does not put the consumers on any different footing of eligibility to buy directly from wholesalers than they are on as unorganized purchasers. Unorganized consumers are supposed to have no privileges at wholesale warehouses, and their orders it would be a breach of a covenant with the retailers to accept. Why should their orders be more acceptable through the medium of a broker than through the medium of themselves? There is no difference corresponding to the distinction.

The retailer who preserves his independence does not ask the wholesalers to back him up in a commendable course. As a man of backbone he deserves such support, even if he had no claim to it as a matter of right. It is doubtful, however, if either sentiment or principle will be very heavily taxed in his behalf; the man who brings the order and appears likely to pay for the goods will get them somewhere, whether his neck wears the yoke of the Patrons or not. There are Patron merchants already, and they find no difficulty in getting stock; it is doubtful indeed if they ever were refused on the ground of their connection with the association. This is something the retail trade should bring home at once to the mind of the wholesalers. The latter are making themselves the competitors of their own deserving customers when they forward supplies to any Patron store that does business within range of any free store. This ought to be discontinued, first, because the wholesalers are committed to the principle of not opposing their retail customers by selling to consumers; second, because it is in the interest of wholesalers to uphold retail profits; and third, because such a consumers' association as the Patrons is a business anomaly. The retailers should not be left alone to fight the Patrons. The wholesalers not only withhold their support from the steadfast men of the retail trade, but they lend their co-operation to the other side by selling to the Patron merchants.

The short-sightedness of such a course as that of supplying Patron stores ought to be apparent to the wholesalers and dissuade them from pursuing it. Cash is a good thing, but in the present circumstances of Canadian economy it presents too narrow a basis for trade. If the wholesaler were asked to choose between the results of trade upon an exclusively cash basis on a margin of 12½ per cent. retail profit, and trade upon a basis that would accommodate itself to the circumstances and eligibility of the purchasers for credit, with perfect freedom among retailers, there is little doubt that they would unhesitatingly choose the latter. If trade were tied to the one motive-power of ready money, it would shrink to much smaller proportions than those of to-day; it would also be slower. The effect of the Patron movement would thus react upon the wholesalers, who are making themselves parties to a big contraction in the volume of trade, as well as a shrinkage of profits, when they supply Patron merchants.

The matter may be brought before the Guild by the self-interest of wholesalers, if the right conjunction of circumstances is brought about in a few cases. If a wholesale house that has long had a good customer in a particular place, finds that his orders fall away to a mere shadow of their former volume, and discovers the reason to be that his competitor—the customer of a rival house—has gone over to the Patrons and got all the local trade, there will naturally be enough chagrin felt over the loss of a good customer to call forth a protest against the cause of this loss. Thus the new form of the old evil—the selling directly to consumers through Patron agents—will be likely to come up for another outburst of righteous denunciation, and some check may be given to the evil. Happily the evil is not likely to obtain a strong foot-hold. The Patrons cannot get themselves established permanently or generally, and as they cripple every man who takes them up, it is probably the best plan to let the merchants who tamper with them run their course. If these merchants who are so ready to sell their commercial liberty, are permitted to get goods the same as usual, they will get through the measure of their humiliation, but it would be merciful of the wholesalers to save them this experience by firmly refusing to sell goods to them.

THE SALESMAN AND PROFITS.

Profits are not solely dependent upon the state of competition, the quality of the goods and the means or liberality of consumers. There is another element that enters into the result. It is the resourcefulness of the salesman. An able salesman will sell goods to better advantage than an ordinary salesman will. The test of salesmanship is not the amount of the sales but the profit on them. A brilliant salesman is not necessarily a good one, judged by this standard. The difficulty is not so much to sellgoodsas to make some money on them. A store can hold goods, a tasteful industrious clerk can display them to good advantage, the goods can help to sell themselves, but it takes a man of consummate ability to save the margin intact.

The training of salesmen is carried on in the right school, and that is behind the counter. But it could be very generally brought to higher perfection of result than it reaches. The stock difficulties should be theorized as well as acted upon. Much in the same way as imaginary legal questions are argued out formally by law students during their professional course, so should imaginary problems be discussed between principal and learner. Here is a grade of coffee, for example, that cannot be sold under 40c.; there is an abundance of lower, priced coffee in the stocks of competitors; what plea should the seller work upon to get the full price in these circumstances from So-and-So, a well-known enemy of profits? Such a question might be forced on the clerk by the necessities of practical business, and it is well that the salesman should have some defence of his profits to fall back upon. He must know that there is no chickory in this coffee, that it is Java or Mocha or a mixture of both, and not a South or Central American coffee. He must know something of the differences between the two classes of coffee, must be able to talk about mild and strong coffees, must know something of the market circumstances prevailing at the moment, and be able generally to impress his customer with the fulness and superiority of his knowledge. That sort of problem should be often conned. Not only does the discussion of questions like this furnish both the novice and veteran with ready answers for particular cases, but exercises them in the habit of equipping themselves to answer haggling customers. To-day the haggling customer is usually met by a concession. Prices are commonly quoted for shading, the belief being that a debateable margin in addition to a fair profit is a good thing, as it enables the salesman to make a seeming sacrifice if the customer happens to be one of the persistent kind.

It is almost as difficult to try to do business with a depleted stock as with an exhausted reserve of pleas to obtain full prices. Often a line of stock will be found lying unsold in one store while the competing store will be found cleaned out of that description of goods. The demand is not lacking in such cases or the goods would be immobile in both stores. The price may check business in one place and may not be allowed to do so in the other, but as often as not the price could be obtained if the salesman was as artful in holding on to the price and letting go the goods as the customer is in the opposite course. The capacity of the demand is sometimes capable of more than the capacity of the salesman's resources. The auctioneer has to be a nimble-witted man. If he were not, if he relied on no other art but that of steady plodding in asking bids, he would soon run his business into the ground. The salesman at the counter must be something more than an automaton. He must be full of expedients to protect his profits and yet push sales. He must know something of varieties in every line of stock, something of markets, and be possessed of the latest information available. If he reads his trade paper diligently he will keep his mind open to the progress of events, and will have a constantly furnished memory to draw from in presenting the case for the profit he is expected to get on everything that it is possible to make a profit on.

A grocer one morning walked into a branch store that a manager was running for him in a suburb, and observing a lot of feed baskets that had been put in stock four or five weeks before, demanded why more of them were not sold before this. The reply was that the price was too high. "Well," said he, "I'll send Jack up a day or two, and we'll see if he can't thin them out." This instance shows what store is placed by experienced men on salesmanship that sells but does not sacrifice.

"NEXT!"

What principle of precedence should the shopkeeper observe in waiting upon his customers? Rank or beauty, age or sex, or simply order of arrival? This is a question which a man's own natural diplomacy, in the presence of the actual facts of each particular case, must provide him with an answer for. A generalized answer, with ample room for the play of exceptions, can be devised for any question, and such an answer to the question asked above would be, Wait on people in the order of their arrival. This is the even-handed way; it levels down all conditions of means, standing,influence, disposition, etc,, and is unobjectionable from a purely moral standpoint. But the purely moral standpoint is not the one from which the customers usually look at the matter. The purely selfish standpoint is the popular one. This fact the trader must become familiar with for his own advantage, and he must make some allowance for it in the application of the general rule quoted above. Potent selfishness is the law which must determine what exceptions are to be made to the general rule.

Tact, discrimination, adroitness, are called for very often, especially in cities, when the store is crowded with all sorts and conditions of men, women and children. The one who is in the greatest hurry feels most obliged by the first care, while the one who has most time to spare is least offended, unless dignity be touched, by the longest waiting. Where gallantry or respect for age seems to have paramount claims over strict adherence to order of arrival, or to the necessities of haste, it is no doubt very often good policy to defer to those claims. This is where nice judgment and subtle acquaintance with human nature are brought into play. It is one of the things learned by the shopkeeper to know how to give the minimum of offence and the maximum of self-satisfaction. A polite word of apology to any one who has been kept waiting ought not to be forgotten. The sourest people like that little deference to their selfishness. A salesman ought to feel that he is born to please. Unswerving adherence to the barber's rule of priority of arrival is right but not politic in all cases. If it gives less offence to deviate from it, the deviation ought to be made. There is one thing though: the man that ignores the rule "First come, first served," will need to know how to apply balm to wounded feelings often, or he will estrange trade. Nothing could be more offensive, nothing more deserving of condemnation than a toadyish spirit in a shopkeeper. Above all things, he must make no display of that. To pass over a poorer customer who stood at his or her place next in order of arrival and ostentatiously evince a readiness to wait on a later and greater person first is unmannerly. When discrimination has to be made unjustly as a matter of policy, it should be done with as much grace as possible.

ADVERTISING PRECEPTS.

It is better to give your money to an orphan's home than to invest it in a poor advertisement.

You must use your brains if you are going to have your advertisement read, Do not be slangy nor coarse, but try to have the ideas attractive and the whole article readable.

It pays to have your advertisement in a good place in your local paper, even if the cost is twice as great. Select a space and always use that space, and people will know where to find your advertisement, just as they know where to find your store. You wouldn't move it once a week, would you?

Select the best paper. That will be a hard task, but try to make sure that the medium you use in talking to your customers is the one that they have most respect for, the one that they like best to read. The paper with the largest circulation is no always the best, for its publisher must have some ideas as to how to set up an advertisement.

Learn how to advertise. Train yourself in the work. Watch for the most striking and most readable advertisements and catch their points of excellence. Try to realize according to the excellence of that investment. You are advertising to make a profit, and the better the medium, the greater will be that profit.

Did you ever ask one of your clerks to write an advertisement for the line of goods he is selling? Try the experiment. It may startle him, and the product of his effort may startle you, but nevertheless it will cause him to take a greater interest in his business, and he will undoubtedly feel that you are watching him and that you consider him as a helper, not as a mere machine for taking down goods and writing out checks.

If you can afford it, buy a nice electro every three months. If you cannot afford that, borrow one from your wholesale merchant. He uses a great many for his own advertisements and for his catalogues. He will willingly lend them to you for a few insertions, and you will be benefited thereby. Do not repel people from your advertisements by the use of a repulsive cut. Get attractive cuts, with artistic merit if possible. Like the rest of the advertisement it should aim to please; and the whole advertisement should be arranged to get the greatest benefit from the cut, in using it as a guide to the reading matter that you place around it.

Advertise always. You do not close your store during the off season, neither should you close your advertisement. When staples are not selling very briskly, that is, between seasons, advertise bargains. Find some line of goods that you have too much of, and make a small reduction and use your advertisement in telling people that you always give bargains, but sometimes extra bargains. Seize the golden opportunity. If there is no opportunity make one. But when you advertise a bargain keep your word. Don't advertise special bargains when you have none Be honest with the public, and they will reward your honesty with confidence. There is no use of saying that you have the cheapest goods on earth; people won't believe you because it occurs to their reasoning faculties that you do not know whether you have or not.

IT COSTS NOTHING.

There is, perhaps, not a business man, today, who would not be willing to entertain a proposition which contained the offer of some tangible commodity at no cost to himself, and which would bring him a good price when placed upon the market. More particulary would he grasp this opportunity if with the financial gain he secured friends and social standing. If he did not accept such a proposition, bringing such results, we would undoubtedly, at least, term the action most foolish and short-sighted. Notwithstanding this, it seems men will not or can not understand the value of common business courtesy, which can be used unsparingly, and at no cost to themselves, with the assurance of a most liberal return.

Purely as a matter of business policy, aside from the desire to be and to act as a gentleman, which should be the aim of every man, it pays to be careful in the smaller details of our meeting and every day intercourse with our fellow-men.

We are well aware of "the cares that beset the day," and especially the busy day of the average, overworked, rushing, American business man, but in a review of all the trials, which must inevitably go to "make up the sum of living," we can find no justifiable reason for hiding every kindly impulse of our better natures, which would tend to brighten our own and others lives, under a cold, austere and oft-times rude exterior.

In the case of younger men, who are just entering active business life, just in the process of being transposed from the position of a zero to that of the unknown quantity in the equation of men and circumstances, we can excuse, on the ground of ignorance, the lack of common civility which too often occurs in their business relations; but in the case of those who are older and who have had the benefit of long experience in commercial circles, there can be advanced no plausible reason for the oversight, if it may be so termed, which leads to the reception you will many times meet with in our best offices and business places.

A smile and pleasant word cost no more exertion than a frown and a gruff reply, and accomplish much more, or at least the same result, leaving the recipient your friend.

It is just as easy on this busy day of yours to tell the life insurance agent pleasantly, that you have not the time to talk with him, as it is to be unkind. It matters not if it is only an Italian banana peddler, it is well to remember he is a man pushing to the full extent of his ability the vocation, which is to him, in its humble way, what your more exalted position is to you under your more favorable circumstances.

The world has not too much sunshine, and will it not pay you to send out a little in the form of business courtesy when it don't cost you anything and you can not estimate its probable value to others.

The writer a few days ago in conversation with one of the most successful travelling salesmen of his acquaintance, was very much impressed with the account of what he termed the "turning point" in his life. He stated that early in his experience, for some unknown cause, it was his misfortune to meet, in his effort to introduce his line in a certain section, a number of that class of business men (?) who seem to think, that if they do not buy the more ruff, bluff, and "cranky" they can be the higher they can place themselves in their own estimation. With his lack of experience, and consequently inability to place the proper estimate upon such people and actions, he had become about discouraged, when fortunately he met, in the person of an old and very influential business man, a friend who did not know he was extending so great a kindness.

In his own language he says: While he did not buy a thing, his kindness was an inspiration which tided me over the discouraging disappointments and I really think made me a salesman and a success."

Out from that office went that which cost the giver nothing and yet, perhaps, started a successful life.

Did it pay?—Grocer and Trade Index.

The C. P. R. Co. has decided to make Windsor its chief shipping point to Chicago, preceding and during the World's Fair. Contracts have been let for building docks along Windsor's front, extending over a quarter of a mile in length, and all freight coming over its Canadian branches and other adjacent connections will be unloaded at Windsor and reloaded on the company's steamers for Chicago. Steamers owned by he company which have hitherto operated on Lakes Huron and Superior will be transferred to the route between Windsor and Chicago. Passengers as well as freight will also be changed at Windsor. The company expects to secure a large portion of the traffic to Chicago. Work on the docks at Windsor will be begun as soon as weather permits.

I. Anderson, J. Anderson, C. Smith, W. C. Matthews and E. Barr, of Toronto, have received incorporation as the Anderson Trading Company with a capital stock of $12,000.

MAHOMET AND THE MOUNTAIN AGAIN.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER :

DEAR SIR,—On looking over your remarks on "Mahomet and the Mountain" it seems to me he must be a kind of sneaking merchant to do as you mention, and not worthy by any means to be set up as a pattern for other merchants to imitate. We have had example of such mercnants (?) but they did not appear to gain the confidence of the thinking public, and their business career was of very short duration. They seem to have too much of the "I came, I saw, I conquered," style about them, good for a dash, but deplorably lacking in "staying" qualities as a rule, and resemble "Jonah's gourd that grew up in a night and disappeared in as short a time." Don't let your prominent grocer get disheartened, but "Keep a stoot hirt for a stey brae," and keep his wits about him, looking for his opportunity, and I have no doubt he has learned, as I have, that the Mountain has often come to the place of business when Mahomet was out on necessary business, and the Mountain was lost for that time.

But there is one bit of information I would like to get from your valuable journal, and that is, How is the proprietor to know when his absence will jeopardise business? Couldn't you by some process or another in this age of invention manufacture a kind of ubiquitous merchant who could be here, there, and everywhere else at the same time. Poor Richard said, "Keep thy shop and thy shop will keep thee," but then he had no experience of sneak merchants and Patrons of Industry. I cannot understand how a woman can allow herself to be pestered with persons calling at all hours soliciting orders, taking up her valuable time, perhaps, at an hour when her whole attention is required at her necessary home duties, and I for one would be more than inclined to tell this fashionably dressed, silk-hatted, and kid-gloved gentleman (?) with the courteous and attractive manner to make himself scarce. I always look with a great deal of suspicion on these oily tongued gentry, that you would think butter woudn't melt in their mouth, and yet they can chew cheese.

Yours truly, CRITIC.

It is understood that Mr. Charles Elliott, of the firm of Elliott & Marr, wholesale grocers, has been named as License Commissioner for London to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Alderman Leonard.

HINTS ON TEA BLENDING.

The art of tea blending is such a peculiarity that it is impossible to actually teach it in print, or give such advice as regards quantities, flavors, etc., as would suit all neighborhoods and people, and all that can be done is to lay down such general precepts and principles as may form a foundation for the blender to work upon.

The taste for tea being an acquired and not a natural one, it frequently occurs that no single variety of tea suits consumers, and therefore the blending of one or two kinds is resorted to. Experience has proved that the skillful blending of a variety of teas will give a more uniform, more pleasing, more satisfying, and less costly beverage than any straight tea, which cannot be followed with any degree of regularity, either in strength or flavor. The blending of one variety or growth of tea with another of different value, in order to bring out a quality and price that was supposed to suit a certain class of tea drinkers, has been practiced from early times. A writer in 1730, after describing the various kinds of tea then known, says: "Hence, if you mix Pekoe (meaning first crop black leaf) and Congou, you shall have an admirably fine tea; you have all the goodness of the last in the first two waters, and of the first in the last two or three, but even then the water should not stand long." But blending, as now understood, is of recent growth; in fact, it is only since the introduction of Indian and Ceylon teas that the subject has been studied. Although these teas (Indian and Ceylons), owing to their pungency and strength, are unacceptable as self-drinking teas, they are most useful in toning up those of China and Formosa.

With the advent of Indian and Ceylon teas, experience has also matured the knowledge of the different grades and growth of the leaf—those grown on high and low land; the leaf produced on heavy and on light soils—until by skillful combination the practiced tea blender is able to produce a variety of mixtures never dreamt of in the early days of the tea trade—in the rusty old times of Bohea and Congou. Cultivators have now learned to produce an infinite variety of leaf, as varied as the wines of the south of France, and possessing as fully as delicate a range of taste in them; one producing a tea that draws a liquor of a dark color; another, a tea with delicate flavor and aroma; while another secures intense strength and pungency, and it is the art of the modern blender so to combine these as to suit the water of his district, and thus get the most satisfactory results in the tea cup.

The successful tea blenders are few. The failure of those who, seeing the desirability of the practice and have attempted it, with the result that, instead of an improvement, there has been a reduction in value so great that a good common Congou or Formosa would have pleased better and cost less, is undoubtedly due to the fact that, not only have their teas been unskillfully mixed, but they have also been wanting in the requisite knowledge of the characteristics of the various classes of teas, or the lines on which they should be blended—which teas are improved and which are deteriorated by combination.

The disideratum in tea mixing is so to combine quality, pungency and strength, that the mixture shall not only come out well in the water, but shall possess a flavor which will please the public, and at the same time be sufficiently distinctive to make the blend a specialty; and also to so arrange the mixture that this result may be attained at the least possible cost.

The importance of studying the characteristics of the water in the blenders' district has been gone into in a previous article. A tea which will "liquor" well in one locality will show poor results in a town a few miles distant, where the water is affected, more or less, by chalk, lime, or other mineral.

The taste for tea varies in different sections of the country, therefore the taste and flavor prevailing in the blenders' district must, to a great extent be followed. Yet, when the taste has been lowered by a too profuse use of Caper, Orange Pekoe, or greens (which are really unfermented black leaves colored), or rather breach of the laws of good blending, it may be as well to strike out a line of your own, and endeavor to elevate and educate the tastes of the consumers; many have adopted this plan and have achieved success. In pursuing this course care must be taken to keep the blend regular and distinctive, thereby insuring the return again and again of the same customer, and thus building up a steady and progressive business. While the advantage of this course is apparent, it is a slow and arduous process, and many dealers will prefer the simple method of falling in with the established taste of their district, gradually introducing improvements as opportunity occurs; but in following this plan the blender is liable to allow his teas to sink to dead level of his competitors', winout distinctive character or quality. A peculiarity in the blend can always be obtained without infringing upon the taste of the district; some particular class of Indians, say Darjeeling or Namuna tea (an Indian tea made from the unfermented leaf, as is the case with Oolongs and basket-fired Japans), or a high-grown Ceylon, or some particular scented or Oolong tea, or some combination of these or other flavors, will give and endless series of distinctive character which can be imparted to the blend. But where the taste is more varied, as in London, New York, and other large centres of consumption, there is a much wider range from which to select a special flavor and style. Of the many mixtures used in London, hardly two are alike; they are most distinct, one using for a foundation a strong, rough Saryune, another a delicate flavored Chin Wo, another a plain Ning Chow, to which is added broken Assam Pekoe Souchong for thickness, Assam Pekoe to give point, and a little red leaf to reduce cost ; another uses one-third or one-fourth Indian, or one-fifth Oolong, with red leaf—the aim of each dealer being to produce a blend that cannot be obtained elsewhere, knowing that when the consumer has once used his tea and is pleased with its distinctive flavor, his custom is assured. The large business of well-known blenders has been built up in this manner. The dealer too often ignores this point. Always give the blend some distinctive flavor. I know a tea dealer, doing a large business, who, before he commenced to blend, always sold straight Oolong and Moning (English breakfast.) Although his customers still call for their teas by these names, and his canisters are still so labeled, they are filled with the same mixture. It took him two years to effect the change, but by pursuing the course he did he considerably increased his trade. The following shows how the change was effected, each alteration in the blend being made about every three months :

Now, take your nine tasting cups and try these mixtures in the above rotation, and allowing for the time between the changes you will find they were so gradually made as not to be noticeable to the public. I think the final blend might have been improved by using a little orange pekoe or basket-fired Japan in the proportion of one in sixteen. From the foregoing remarks it will be seen that, to make a retail tea trade a permanent success, the palate of the consumer must be educated and adapted to the quality and flavor of the tea. Granted that fair value is given by the dealer in return for money, in nine cases out of ten, when the purchasers' palates become habituated to a particular flavor and strength, and the eye to a particular color, they will reject as grossly inferior a much more expensive and superior tea. * * *

It may be necessary to remind the blender that he should always keep a sample of the mixture, and also samples of its different parts, with a list of their proportions, so that when the batch is used up they will form a guide upon which to make the succeeding mixture ; by this means the blend may always be kept at a regular flavor and quality. If this necessary precaution is neglected it would not be known how the last blend was composed or how to match it, and the novice would be unable to do so. These samples should be kept in air-tight glass jars or tin boxes ; for if kept in paper or card-board boxes the tea in a little while absorbs the flavor of the material, and then they taste dull and "papery."

Never use scoops or measures in mixing, but always use weights and scales, for the plain reason that some teas weigh heavier than others, and therefore less bulky. The difference in an ordinary scoopful of the following teas, of equal quality and value, is about 1½ ounce : Oolong (Formosa), Moning, Assam and basket-fired Japan; the latter is the heaviest, and a scoopful of it will weigh nearly four ounces more than the Oolong, so, consequently, by the use of scoops or measures there will be sometimes more and sometimes less of a certain tea in the blend than would be desirable. Why go to the trouble of carefully tasting and selecting the most suitable teas, and arranging them in the most advantageous proportions, to allow the beauties of the combination to be spoiled, and a muddling of its component parts by the use of scoops and measures? The advantages of weighing in blending teas cannot be overestimated ; it is one of the means by which a blend can be kept at all regular.

Having arranged the various ingredients of the blend, be sure to get them thoroughly mixed; for this purpose a tea-mixer should be used; the leaves and dust of the various teas are distributed throughout the bulk in a more even manner by a machine than when tea mixing is done by hand. The various teas being blended, in order to procure a thorough assimulation of the different flavors the mixture should be put into air-tight canisters and allowed to stand for one or two weeks before using. Should the mixture be used as soon as prepared, first one, then another part of its ingredients will find its way into the teapot in too great a proportion, thus, to a great extent, nullifying all the care and trouble that has been taken in arranging the blend, no one liking tea that does not taste twice the same, whereas if the mixture be allowed to stand as above mentioned, it will be "always good alike."

It is said that "tea is not sold to be looked at," yet the appearance of your tea should not be neglected, many people being prejudiced for or against a tea by its appearance. Where teas of rough, irregular leaf are used, they should be sifted before putting in the mixer, in order to remove the large leaves, which should be cut to gauge by means of a tea-cutter, and then placed in the mixer with the rest of the blend. The dust in a blend should always be sold with it, as it is the best liquoring part of the tea ; but it should be so evenly distributed as not to be distinguishable to the purchaser ; this can only be done by using a tea-mixer.

Tea, if not improved, is deteriorated by blending. The first rule of tea blending is not to allow the smallest quantity of unsound tea to be introduced into any blend. The least portion of "musty" or "mousy" flavored tea, or unclean, scented, or sour or acrid Indian in a blend will spoil the whole mixture ; no matter how well the rest of the blend may be arranged, the nastiness of the unsound tea will taste through. Do not, for the sake of a bargain, be tempted to turn to poor qualities, which are likely to alter the character of the tea in the cup. Good clean tea can always be bought for a fraction above the rubbish that is sold for "quotation." By the gain of a present cent or two your future trade is most likely ruined, the public is disgusted and discredit is cast on tea as an article of food, whereas, by making a small present sacrifice for the sake of future trade, satisfaction is given, trade fostered, an impetus given to consumption and the trader will find his "best thing last."—The Spice Mill.

THE APPRENTICE SYSTEM.

The English people, says a contemporary, are intensely conservative in their views, and are in the habit of sticking to their old customs and traditions with as much tenacity as an ivy plant does to a church ruin ; it is not to be wondered, therefore, that the shadow of the passing of the apprenticeship system, a practice handed down from a time beyond which the memory of man goeth not, should awaken comment. While we may be inclined to indulge in occasional pleasantry at the old-fashioned ways of our cousins over the water, there is no denying the fact that a system which assures to a boy a thorough training under wholesome influences during the years when he is most susceptible to good or evil ascendencies, is one which it would be almost a national misfortune to see swept away. It is an acknowledged fact the world over that men who have faithfully served out their terms of apprenticeship under the English system are almost without exception competent workers, whether as handicraftsmen or as tradesmen. Having learned thoroughly a certain trade, they are content to devote their lives to it, and so the knowledge acquired during the long term of apprenticeship serves as a foundation, we may say, upon which their industrial lives are built.

THE JOBBER IN BANKRUPT STOCKS

It looks as if the present method of throwing bankrupt stocks upon the open market would have to become intolerable before it is remedied. Traders who pay one hundred cents in the dollar have shown unusual patience and self-restraint under the continued injustice of this slovenly way of closing up insolvent businesses. The man whose honesty and good husbandry enable him to hold his own against the assaults that are persistently made upon his profits in the ordinary circumstances of competition, is entitled to protection and support from the wholesalers, when his business is threatened to be swamped by the failure and settlement of his rival. In the equal terms upon which he competed before the flag of his opponent was lowered, he ran risks of coming out vanquished. Because he did not come out vanquished he deserves praise and consideration. But what does he commonly receive? He gets a readjustment of the terms of competition; his rival or some jobber in bankrupt stocks is allowed to take the goods of the competing store at probably less than half their value; the trader who has maintained his solvency is thus handicapped, and the race between the two stores is begun anew, with this incalculable advantage on the side of the former loser. The seeming object of such a mode of disposing of bankrupt stocks is to force the abler or worthier man to succumb to a stronger power than his competitor could wield. It is the power of the wholesaler's influence on the side of the less deserving.

But while it is not desirable that the victim of his own price-cutting proclivities, or his own business shortcomings generally, should be given any unfair advantage over the man who meets all his engagements, it is still less desirable that advantage should be given to any interloper over the stalwarts of the trade. The bankrupt stock jobbers are doing an enormous lot of mischief because of the availability at easy prices of insolvent stocks. These men are the worst enemies of square, stand-up methods of doing business. They get a hold of the stock at 40 to 60c on the dollar, and are much more formidable in competition than the trader who has failed would be, if he were allowed to take the stock at the same price. He would probably aim to make enough money out of it to buy a new stock when the bankrupt goods were exhausted, and would therefore aim at a reasonably good profit on the low cost prices he had to pay. The jobber in bankrupt stocks, on the other hand, is generally a man with some spare money, and can be operating in two or three places with different stocks at the same time. Thus lower profits on his low cost will pay him, and he will undermine the legitimate dealer's prices much more than the former owner, if the latter had obtained a settlement, would have done.

WINDSOR RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The Executive Committee of Windsor Retail Grocers' Association met on Thursday evening, the 21st inst., according to arrangement, at the Manning house, promptly at 8 o'clock, and proceeded to Sandwich, where the task of formulating answers to the sixteen questions sent to the Association was thoroughly performed. Much regret was expressed at the unavoidable absence of the Secretary, he having sent word by Director J. W. Hawkins that Mrs. Davis was very ill and could not be left. Mr. Meloche kindly acted as secretary, and after the business of the evening was got through, the company adjourned from the office of John Speers Esq., to the residence of that gentleman, where the meeting was held, and where they were most royally entertained. A very pleasant two hours were spent. In honor of John's election to the vice-presidency, the native wines for which the old town of Sandwich is now becoming famous were freely sampled, so much so that some of the Windsor merchants were a little behind time in getting down to business next morning

The following are the answers made:

1. We do not regard the new terms favorably. The old terms were more satisfactory.

2. We approve the sliding scale on quantities of starch, sugar, etc.

3. We would not be in favor of the terms proposed instead, that is: 45 days, with 1½ per cent. discount for cash in 15 days, all other goods 3 months, with 3 per cent. discount for cash in 15 days.

4. Not to any extent are wholesale houses here in the habit of selling to consumers.

5. They do not sell to any extent to charitable institutions, etc.

6. Have no suggestion to make to check wholesalers selling to consumers.

7. We know of no wholesale houses selling to consumers.

8. Would by all means favor withdrawal of custom from wholesale houses which give credit to irresponsible traders.

9. Bankrupts should be dealt with as the circumstances causing the failure may call for. If through unforeseen circumstances, adversity, etc., deal leniently; if through fast living, etc., let the insolvent be treated as he deserves.

10. There are no supply stores here.

11. We would withdraw our trade from houses maintaining supply stores.

12. The peddling business is conducted indiscriminately, no license being required, to the injury of every grocery keeper's business.

13. A delegation of this Association waited on the Mayor to ascertain if anything could be done in the matter of regulating or suppressing the peddling nuisance. The mayor, who is a lawyer, looked up the law on the subject, and we were informed that nothing could be done without a change in the act, as at present any resident of the province can sell goods how, when, and where he pleases.

14. Let a delegate from each association attend the Legislative Committee at the next session of the Legislature, and urge them to restore to the towns and cities the power to pass by-laws regulating peddling in connection with their market by-laws, as they formerly had.

15. The license fee here is $10 a year from the hucksters who come over from Detroit only.

16. We think it desirable to hold a retail merchants' Convention. Would recommend Windsor as the place, and the first of July next as the time. There we will show you the best electric railway in America, the garden of Canada right at our door here, and the most beautiful river and liveliest Island park in the world.

SELL EVERYTHING.

The London Grocer, in reviewing the past year, has the following in relation to the sell-everything system: While the past year has not witnessed any startling developements in this direction, a good deal of quiet, steady progress has been made, and many of our readers have, as suitable opportunities offered, been adding new goods to their stock. Thus the area of the grocer's business is gradually extending; he is continually opening up new ground; and if this be done judiciously, such expansion is pretty certain to be profitable. It is all a question of public demand. Customers' wants must be carefully studied. In these days of hurry and push, people do not like to have to go into six different shops for six different articles; they prefer to buy the lot at one shop, and the trader who gives them this facility will get there business. This is merely an illustration but it is well within the mark. Grocers should strive never to send a customer empty away. If they have not what he wants they should get it at once; thus they will please the buyer, who, favorably impressed by their enterprise, will, as the saying is, 'come again.' They will also gain additional experience in a new line, will make a distinct step forward, will extend their business, and will lay the foundation of a development which may become almost indefinite, and which promises satisfactory results. We recognize the difficulties to be overcome. Some traders may not have the necessary capital; others lack the needful storage accommodation; a few, we are afraid, are deficient in enterprise. And the last is the most serious difficulty of all. But, whatever may be the particular obstacles in the way, the system can always be adopted with modifications—partially, tentatively—and thus begun, may be left to its natural growth. This is what many grocers have done during the past year, and they have no reason to complain of the results.

Winnipeg continues steadily progressive, judging from the fact that the Inland Revenue collections last month amounted to $34,625, being an increase of $10,714 over the corresponding month of last year.

One night last week, thieves secured an entrance to the grocery store of Christopher Webb, 273 Queen street west, Toronto. All that is missed so far is what the till contained, which amounted to about $3 in coppers and silver.

The many friends of Mr. Hugh Blain, of the prominent firm of Eby, Blain & Co., will read with sorrow of the death of Mrs. Blain, which occurred at the family residence, No. 50 St. George street, last evening. Mrs. Blain was only 28 years of age, having been married four and a half years ago. She belonged to a well-known southern family. Mrs. Blain has been ill about four weeks.

Mr. Henry Harrison, manager of China hall, Toronto, died last week of typhoid fever. He had been ill for about two weeks, but his death was totally unexpected. The deceased was one of the heirs of his uncle, Mr. Glover Harrison, the founder of China hall, and since the death of his uncle has carried on the business.

Mr. Wilson, of the firm of Wilson & Ranahan, grocers, London, Ont., has had a severe attack of la grippe, and has not been able to leave his room since the first of the month. He is getting better, and is expected to be in his accustomed place of business in a few days. La grippe has had a strong hold on many London merchants, but fortunately all are recovering.

Mr. W. C. Horton, late of Kingston, and Mr. W. Ainsworth, of Cape Vincent, were on trial at Rome, N. Y., charged with smuggling fish from Canada. They purchased 1,063,391 lbs. of fish, and duty on this amounted to $8,000. Fishermen say they have not defrauded the Government because they owned the apparatus used by the fishermen. The case was adjourned to February 12th.

An experiment is being made in shipping fresh salmon from the Pacific coast to Europe. If it be successful, fresh salmon will be shipped hereafter instead of canned salmon. Thirty thousand pounds of fresh salmon were shipped in a car from the Frazer last week, going by way of the Canadian Pacific to New York, and thence, in the cold storage room of a German steamship, to Hamburg.

Mr. J. B. Kelly, one of the successful merchants of Calgary, Alberta, was in the city a few days ago. Mr. Kelly was on a business trip east, and will visit Montreal before returning to Calgary. He went from Kincardine, Ontario, to British Columbia 13 years ago, and prosperity seems to have followed his footsteps. Mr. Kelly is loud in his praises of the great Canadian North-west. He predicts a splendid future for Calgary, which has a population now of between 4,500 and 5,000 people. "The man who goes to the North-west prepared to work," said Mr. Kelly, "need have no fear of his success. We want the people, and new comers will never be able to say that they have not been well treated by the residents who are there now"

Messrs. Perkins, Ince & Co., have now in store the "Sterling" brand lobsters in flat and tall tins. Prunes, Bosnia, in casks and "Sphinx" brand in cases.

The daughter of a well-to-do grocer, in St. Johns, Newfoundland, named Dempsey, was one of the parties in a strange picture in a New York police court, last week. She stood before the judge and pleaded for the release of a young man just convicted of theft, that she might marry and reform him. The judge released him on the condition that the marriage ceremony was performed at once.

A burglary took place at the grocery store of Mr. J. Beauchamp, corner of Amherst and Mignonne street, Montreal, early on Saturday morning the window being broken in and $60 worth of goods stolen. The constable on the beat did not know of the occurrence until it was reported to headquarters, and hence he was discharged. This would seem to mean that police are not allowed to sleep on their beats in Montreal.

Mr. C. J. Peter, of the Toronto Biscuit & Confectionery Co., is in the city, from a trip through western Canada. He speaks in glowing terms of the state of trade in the different towns he visited, says merchants are very busy for this month, and all express the opinion that Canada, from a business standpoint, is all o. k. His company certainly have no reason to complain of the state of trade, because they are running the same staff now that they did during the busy weeks before Christmas. Push, energy, and attention to business get there every time.

While in the city on Wednesday, Mr. JohnMc Dermid, grocer, Georgetown, kindly spent a few spare minutes in this office. Mr. McDermid trades in a district that is infested by Patrons of Industry, and in a county where that association has had the hardihood to place in the field a candidate for the House of Commons. His remarks upon the Patrons were particularly interesting, bringing out some aspects of the Patron movement that could occur only to a very intelligent practical man of business, Mr. McDermid had some complimentary and encouraging words to say of THE GROCER.

RESPECTING SPECIALTIES.

Messrs. Taylor, Scott & Co., Toronto, are the sole agents here for the Standard Cash Register. Traders are beginning to realize the value of a cash register as a check upon errors, and as a means of making very careful everybody who has the handling of cash. The Standard has special claims upon the consideration of merchants, and those who want a cash register ought to communicate with Taylor, Scott & Co. for particulars.

Messrs. John S. Pearce & Co., London, are the Ontario agents for Lister's Alexandria Cream Separators. These separators are equally useful to the owner of one cow or a score of cows. They enable the dairymaid to separate the cream from the milk as it is drawn from the cow, and effect a large saving in butter-fat, in which there is now an unnecessary waste. The trade should recommend them to farmers, and write to Pearce & Co. for full particulars as to cost, etc.

FARMERS' INSTITUTES.

The following sensible letter on Farmers' Institutes was written to the Stratford Evening Herald by a well-known grocer of that city:

To the Editor of the Herald.

DEAR SIR,—In reading the proceedings of the Farmers' Institute in your paper the other day I notice the great cry was the lack of attendance of farmers. This certainly is a great mistake on the part of the farmers. Farming, like every other business in this advanced day needs education. It is clearly proven that the wrong fertilizer may be applied and many of the points brought out so to show the great waste of labor, time, etc., by our farmers simply for want of the proper information on all the important points in connection with their occupation. Crops are not sown in the proper rotation; thistles and weeds are allowed in many places to grow higher than the grain. Who are the wealthy farmers in our county? Why, the men who watch all these points and give them attention. Every farmer within a radious of 12 miles should have attended the Institute meetings. If the farmers of this beautiful section do not thrive and even make money it is because they do not make a proper study of their business. How is it that while some farmers are adding land to land, others alongside of them are always in debt? Lack of agricultural knowledge. Take the man in business—how long will he stand if he allowed his business to go slip shod? He has got to watch closely his invoices, his collections, waste in values, and a thousand minor items that take the business man's whole energies when margins are so low and competition so keen. If the Patrons of Industry, who are wasting their time trying to be merchant and farmer both, would abandon that idea and give all their energies to a a thorough knowledge of their business, they would be infinitely and better paid. The farmer has a healthy occupation, no little petty annoyances, takes his grain to market, gets his cash and is the most independent man on earth. It seems to be only a few that fancy the merchant has a soft time, but if they had one year behind the counter I think they would return to the rural district, more than ever satisfied that farming is the best occupation after all. It is to be hoped that farmers' sons will take a greater interest in acquiring a thorough knowledge of the affairs to improve themselves in pursuits of the farm. I have tried both and know which is best.

MIDDELEMEN.

Every little while there is a revival of the war against middlemen. It is a favorite theory that it is possible to distribute goods from the factory or farm direct to consumers, thereby doing away with the services of middlemen—the jobber, commission merchant, broker. This theory is the stock-in-trade of those who originate co-operative schemes and who would lure the small dealer or the consumer out of the beaten tracks of trade. Middlemen exist and prosper because there is a demand for their services. They are not parasites or leeches, preying on the importer, manufacturer, grower or producer, but helps, auxiliaries. In many cases they are trained specialists whose services are as indispensable to the general conduct of trade and commerce as are those of the specialist in surgery or in the practice of medicine to the afflicted.

The services of middlemen cost less than if rendered by the first-hand dealer. As a rule, the middleman is an expert, with a special knowledge of markets and a wider clientage than is ordinarily controlled by the producer or manufacturer. He saves time and expense, rather than imposes any additional charge. Consumers are, in their sphere, learning the lessons which the middlemen have been teaching for years, viz., that it is a saving of time, trouble and expense to pay somebody else for doing anything which can be performed with greater celerity and in better manner at lower cost than by themselves.

For instance, the thrifty housekeeper, dependent upon an inexperienced servant, discovers that it is economy for her to buy soup, mincemeat, catsup, preserves and other articles of prepared food at the store, rather than attempt to prepare the same at home. She has learned that time, fuel, labor and worry are saved, while better and more uniform results are secured by using goods prepared by expert manufacturers (middlemen) in a scientific way at low cost. Machinery, steam and the economies of the large establishment combine to do what could not possibly be done as well in the home. The division of labor in this way is one of the greatest economic factors of the time. What housekeeper is there who would think for a moment of abandoning the use of baking powder and going back to the universal custom of a quarter of a century ago, of mixing for herself cream of tartar and baking soda of uncertain quality? The old sodden or yellow biscuit has departed forever, because a manufacturer (middleman) has come between the consumer and the storekeeper.

Every little while the retailers in some city or town get the idea that they can combine and purchase certain proprietary goods and by distributing them among themselves and others save the jobbers' (middlemen's) profit. In time they discover that the cost involved in handling the large lot, breaking it up into small lots, distributing the same, added to the expense and risk involved in collecting from several parties to pay one large bill amounts to more than the profit they sought to save. Thus it is that all such schemes sooner or later fall to the ground.

"Live and let live," is a good old axiom that strictly, followed, brings the greatest satisfaction and best results. Recently the President of the Wholesale Grocers' Association of New York and vicinity, has been doing good missionary work in the interest of the middlemen. He says:

"I believe that the manufacturer, wholesale grocer and retail grocer are actually necessary to human existence in this city. It is manifestly impossible for the manufacturer to deal directly with the consumer and supply him at his home without the aid of the retailer. As it takes at least 3,000 retailers to supply 1,000,000 consumers, it is equally impossible for the manufacturer to deal directly with them, as it involves too great an outlay for salesmen, collectors, bookkeepers, delivery clerks, credit clerks, horses, wagons, etc. Although it is their privilege to do it if they have the capital to establish the necessary plant, and have in addition the knowledge as manufacturer, and the ability to carry on a great distributing business. As on the average it takes but thirty wholesale grocers to reach and supply 3,000 retailers, and through them 1,000,000 of consumers, and as the wholesale dealer carries in stock the goods of all manufacturers, and has accounts with all retailers, the manufacturer must depend upon the wholesaler for the distribution of his goods. As their business is organized for, and has the necessary plant for this purpose, the wholesaler can distribute the goods of a large number of manufacturers much more promptly and with less expense than the manufacturers can do it for themselves. The great question for the consideration of the Retail Grocers' Union and the Wholesale Grocers' Association is to find some fair and just basis on which the equities between each can be adjusted so that each can receive a fair remuneration for services rendered to the public.

"The great obstacle that stands in the way of the success of the wholesaler and retailer is found in the reckless extension of credit to irresponsible parties, and the ruinous cutting of prices that is indulged in by those who are not willing to pursue a 'live and let live' policy.

"This is an age of associations, and I firmly believe that the remedy for many of the evils in the trade will be met and cured by friendly associations, and co-operation brought about by the meetings of merchants in business and social relations."—American Grocer.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Jan. 28, 1892.

GROCERIES.

The grocery trade is seldom so dull as it is this week. The business done by all the houses on the street would not be a great matter for the smallest of them to handle alone in a time of ordinary activity. Not since holidays, hardly even then, has there been less doing than there now is. Both city and country traders keep aloof from the market, and the former report a very light call on consumptive account. The big local retailers note a very perceptible slackening of the demand. Travellers report from the country that sales are extremely hard to effect, and their orders verify their words. Sleighing suffered badly on Monday when the hard spell was broken by a thaw. The stagnation of trade is nearly the only characteristic to note. Minor features are the receipt of new Sphinx prunes, cutting in yellow sugars, the scarcity of good medium teas, a reduction in the price of Clover Leaf lobsters, a stronger tone outside on currants and Sultana raisins, a tendency towards hardness in coffees and some movement of round lots of canned vegetables. Money is less free on accounts due than it was a week ago.

CANNED GOODS.

Though retailers' orders have contributed little to the strength of prices this week, the market holds its own. Jobbers talk of advancing quotations on vegetables. No good brands can be got in round assorted lots below $1.05, and $1.10 is held out for without concession by one or two houses. Two cars of assorted vegetables were sold on eastern account on Monday at full prices. The stock of peas in all hands is evidently small and in request, particularly from Montreal, in large parcels. No appreciable expansion to the supply that was on the market at the opening of the season has been brought out by the comparative scarcity, and it is generally felt that packers can add very little to stocks now in second hands. This feeling has imparted a stronger tone to holders of the less renowned brands, and there is nothing heard this week of sales or offers at $1 for this description of goods. Salmon is quiet and unchanged at $1.35 and upwards. Lobster is equally listless and the price of Clover Leaf has been marked down 20c. to $2.75. This was done to enable grocers to retail at 25c. per tin, which they could not do under the $2.95 quotation.

COFFEES.

Local jobbers are trying to get a little more for Rio coffee than they were selling at last week, but prices are hard to get up when nobody offers to buy even on the lower plane of value. Outside influences are on the stiffening side. Here Rios job out at 18½ to 19c. A round lot of 100 bags was sold since last report at 16½c. Choicest V. O. G. Javas are higher, but the market may ease under the effect of official reports that show the Government crop to be over a hundred peculs above the estimate that was made in August last. A fair quantity of good Mochas and Javas are held here in wholesale hands at prices indicated in Prices Current.

DRIED FRUIT.

Business in fruit can be no worse so far as volume goes than it has been this week. Easy prices are not bringing forth buyers, and higher figures may be quoted before anybody has much stock in store. For, wholesalers, as well as retailers, are far from being heavily stocked. The New York market is evincing more strength on Valencia raisins and on currants. Good off-stalk Valencia raisins are held here at 5½c., while even 5c. may be shaded for low-class fruit in stock. Layer Valencias have grown in request lately. They are worth 7 to 8c. Advices from the primary market report an advance in Sultana raisins. Jobbers are manifesting interest in this fruit in the way of inquiries just now. Stocks are light and the demand from confectioners is always a considerable matter. Currants of undoubtedly good quality are more firmly held, as advices from Patras report that in first hands there are left no provincials that can be designated first-class. Orders forwarded from here for choice provincial fruit have had to be declined. There are grades of currants obtainable at 5½c., but fine stock is firm at 5¾c. and upwards. The bulk shipments of Sphinx prunes for all parts of Canada are now in stock. The first shipment, which arrived about six weeks ago, was distributed among the retail trade almost as soon as it came to hand. By an error in last week's report U was said to be the only grade on the way. A and B are also in this shipment, which includes both casks and kegs in the three grades. Spot prices are not yet quoted, though to arrive 6¾ to 7c. has been the range.

An improvement in the packing of the Sphinx prunes is to be noted this year. The design which formerly went with packages of this brand was a blue circle with the letter (A or B, etc.) which denoted the grade, in the centre. This is now varied by colors, which tint the background harmoniously, and add materially to the effect.

NUTS.

There is little to be found to furnish occasion for remark. Buyers do not come forward, prices are steady and stocks are moderate.

RICE AND SPICES.

In rice there is little expected to be done at this time of year, and there is less being done than is due. The price is 3⅞c. for Aracan and 5c. for Japan. Spices are likewise usually quiet in mid winter. They show a little more life in London than they did. Black pepper is quiet and unchanged at 12½ to 15c. Zanzibar cloves are dull outside. Tapioca is quite firm in sympathy with the English market, but is not selling well.

SUGAR.

If a jobber should suddenly go in for breaking the combine on granulated sugar and offer that sweet at 4½c., it is doubtful if he would be able to rally any great number of buyers about him in the present forlorn condition of the market. The grain of the demand seems to run against attempts at selling, and business is consequently at a very low point of activity. Refiners appear to await developments very cheerfully. The position of the raw market, the steadiness of tendencies that were the basis of M. Licht's estimate, and the certainty that buying must commence with vigor in the reasonably near future, out-weigh the effects of a temporary ebb in the demand. The usual result of dulness is seen in the cutting of prices for yellows, and while the lowest acknowledged price, 3½c., is barely the cost value for stock laid down here, there are some instances of sales at 3⅜c. and even 3.35c for lowest grade yellows. This is a violation of the agreement to which jobbers are bound by oath and the risk of a big money forfeit, but it is said that some travellers are still unsworn.

Willett & Gray's New York Weekly Statistical Sugar Trade Journal contains the following notes on sugar :

Raws—There has been just sufficient tendency towards lower prices since our last report to decide sales of centrifugals at 3 7-16c, instead of 3½c. Earnest offorts to make quotations of 3⅜c have not yet succeeded, and some pressing demand for supplies may prevent it, although there is a disposition on the continent to make concessions in beet sugar, perhaps for the purpose of catching some of the American trade. Cuba, however, looks upon the United States as her special selling ground during the early part of the crop, and concessions of beet sellers are not likely to be sufficient to secure business for some time to come at the parity of prices which Cuba will accept to keep control of the demand. As the Louisiana crop is about exhausted for refining purposes, the demand for foreign sugar would be increasing over last year but for the exceeding and long continued dulness of the refined market, and the absence of all profit to refiners. At the close to-day market is rather firmer.

Beet crop—M. Licht raises his estimate of Russia 30,000 tons, and reduces Austria 30,000 tons, leaving total crop unchanged, but has raised his figures of last year's crop, giving a deficiency this year of 165,567 tons.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.

A decline from last week's activity is about all there is to report in relation to syrups, which are still cheap and plentiful. Low grades are to be had at 2c., but this price is for United States stock only. Less money would probably effect a purchase.

Molasses shares in the general depression, and trade in it has shrunk away from the proportions it reached a week ago. No attendant easing in prices is to be reported, West Indian molasses is worth 35 to 38c. in puncheons, and New Orleans 30 to 35c., with very little of the very highest grades of the latter in stock.

TEAS.

Though orders have not been either large or numerous for teas, they remain the largest part of the grocery business that is transacted. The demand previous to this week was very steady and strong; it moved a very considerable quantity of tea into retail hands, and now assortments are broken up pretty badly, showing gaps particularly in medium grades, and in those grades of Japan most especially. Japans at 20 to 24c. are pretty well cleared up. Prices in this range of quality are therefore firmer than they were. For very low grades, too, there is more money paid, according to quality, than there was a few years ago. Young Hysons range from 16c. up, and the want of moderate stocks in the lowest grades is felt. Blacks are from 14c. upwards, while grades of Japan can be had for 12½c. Assam teas are stiffer outside. The demand for Indian teas has been good, and orders are coming in from the country. In London the market has been overcrowded with tea this week, and, though prices were fairly well maintained, common sorts sold but slowly at rather easier rates than have been ruling of late. Medium and fine teas have well maintained previous prices, and there seems to be a considerably better demand for them than for the low-priced teas, which are comparatively neglected. It would be of great advantage to everyone concerned if the size of the sales could be made more equable. On the first three days of the week buyers were compelled to value a bewildering number of samples, while on Thursday the sale—for the time of year—was very small. There can be no doubt that the drooping prices noticeable towards the end of this week have been entirely caused by the injudicious manner in which the market has been flooded with tea. The Chicago Exhibition is likely to exercise important influence upon the future of the Indian and Ceylon tea industries. It is therefore satisfactory to note that steps have been taken for their adequate representation. The necessity for utilizing this powerful agency for fostering a taste for Indian and Ceylon teas in the United States cannot be overrated. The heaviest quantity ever brought to public auction in one week did not materially overstrain the market. At Monday's unprecedently large sale the closing rates of last week were fully supported with good all round bidding. At later sales commonor kinds suffered to a great extent, and were here and there a farthing cheaper. Quality of recent imports is better, especially from "Darjeeling," "Dooars," "Terai," and "Assam."

MARKET NOTES.

Miller Ogilvie has given $1,000 to build a new Y. M. C. A. block in Winnipeg.

J. Cleghorn & Son have just received a fine line of oranges and lemons, all in good order and free from frost, just missing this extreme cold spell.—See advt.

W. W. Ogilvie, who is the largest individual miller in the world, recently refused $3,000,000 for his Canadian plant, exclusive of the Gould Mills.

Ivorine Starch, the new process cold water starch, is continuing to gain favor with the trade, and is worthy of attention from those who have not yet handled it.

Mr. T. R. Stewart, Vancouver, B. C., is in Toronto making purchases of creamery and dairy butter, eggs, cheese and apples for shipment to the coast. He says large quantities of these products are now going from Ontario to British Columbia.

Grocers who handle liquors are doing an unusually active trade for this time of the year. December, as a rule, is the most active month in the wholesale liquor trade, but in whiskeys, at any rate, January this year bids fair to equal the last month of the year. They are used chiefly as a preventive of and a cure for the grip and colds. The consumption of of Scotch whiskey seems to be increasing in Canada, though there is no decrease in the demand for the Canadian article.

The superior quality of the Goathead brand of tapioca has attracted to it a very large share of the demand that goes to tapioca generally. Its appearance must of itself bias the purchaser in its favor. It is genuine tapioca, undiluted with potato mash or other adulterant. Messrs. Eby, Blain & Co. find their trade in this specialty a rapidly increasing one.

Mr. Joseph Carman, Winnipeg, Man., is open to undertake business for manufacturers who want an active agent in that city. He already represents Ireland'e National Food Co., Toronto, and Senard Bros., fish merchants, St. John, N. B. He has a well established connection in the district tributary to his place of business, having for a number of years traded as produce commission merchant in Winnipeg.

Messrs. W. H. Gillard & Co., wholesale grocers, Hamilton, are reaping substantial returns from the reputation their Mallawalla tea has made for itself among consumers. All who have used it vote this package tea one of the richest in flavor and in strength. The same firm are fortunate in having the market for so popular a baking powder as the Diamond, which is in very wide demand on account of its merit and cheapness. Diamond Baking Powder sells well everywhere.

In their advertisement in this issue Messrs. Chas. Bœckh & Sons draw attention to the full lines, sterling quality and excellent value of their widely reputed brooms, which they are prepared to stock the trade with upon the most advantageous terms. Dealers should send for their price list. It is a strong point in these manufacturers' favor that they have the courage to refuse business with Patrons of Industry merchants. Their brushes and woodenware lines are, as they have always been, standard goods.

PETROLEUM.

The sales this week show some falling-off from the volume of business done last week. Prices are stationary at the former quotations.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.29 per bbl., Oil Springs crude $1.29. Quietude yet continues one of the salient features of the crude oil market. Owing to absence of inquiry it is difficult to say just what the exact price is of the raw material, as we notice Oil Springs producers selling their production to the refiner direct instead of on the exchange. This circumstance is worth mentioning, chiefly because it points to the fact that the Oil Springs crude must be mixed about half and half with the Petrolia product to make a good distillate. This being the case it means that a premium ought to be paid for Oil Springs oil. The great danger is if refiners buy direct from the larger producer and quietly give them a premium the legitimate price of oil is gone, and we will be working back into the same old groves of buying and selling that we had here years ago, when one of the largest producers here of crude oil dictated his own terms to the refiners and was getting one dollar and fifty cents for his oil when the small producer was only getting eighty-five cents. The market for refined oil has been about the same as crude, devoid of features of interest, prices remain about the same, 11½ to 12c.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There is usually a better delivery of butter at this time of year than is now being experienced. A comparative backwardness in the supply has been a feature of the week's business, and this points to probable collections at other points, as buyers outside were picking up butter a week or two ago for shipment eastward. The prices of low grade tub were strengthened by these operations, as this description of butter appeared to be in especial request by those buyers, and but little of it made its way here. Both consignments and sales are reported short in all tubs. Choice western dairy tubs would bring as high as 18c., while tub below the highest grade and yet in the category designated "good" will bring 16 to 17c. Medium grades range from 12 to 16c Good tub butter as well as medium and low grade tub would find a ready market here now. The butter coming to hand is nearly all in large rolls, which arrive in boxes and baskets, and sell at 14 to 16c., only the finest having any hope of realizing the highest figure. A demand from bakers for common grades of tub keeps the market cleaned up of this class of stock.

Cheese is very firm at 11½ to 12c. for choice autumn makes in ordinary lots. Summer cheese is not in request, but is in stock at 9½ to 10c.

According to Board of Trade returns the imports of cheese into the United Kingdom during the years named were as follows :

	[—From U. S.—]		[--From Canada--]
	Cwts.	Value.	Cwts.	Value.
1891.	774,893	£1,779,260	857,841	£1,991,597

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES—The range, corresponding with the qualities obtainable, is wide. A round lot in which there was a considerable proportion of sweets, and in which there was some wasty stock, was sold on Monday at $1. Another large lot of picked, well-packed Spies was sold at $2.50. These two prices indicate the range. There is a good deal of shipping going on, but at no profit to the exporters.

BEANS--A fair jobbing trade is done at $1.40 to $1.50; round lots are seldom called for, but are to be had at $1.20 to $1.30.

CRANBERRIES—The price is easier at $7 to $7.50. Stocks this year are unusually large at all the leading points of distribution. Offers are made to local fruit merchants to consign cars to them, something heretofore unknown in the cranberry market.

DRIED APPLES—In small or ordinary parcels are 4½ to 4¾c. on spot, and from 4 to 4¼c. outside, according to size of lot. Holders appear to want more money and the offerings are not large.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Stocks on the market are small and not likely to be much larger for some time, if the resources of the free supply are no larger than present offerings indicate. The demand, however, for present consumption does not call for more. Prices are 8 to 8½c. for small lots and 7½c. for cars.

EGGS—The demand for fresh eggs is likely to outrun the supply, as the weather is against production. Fresh are all the way from 16 to 18c., with perhaps 1c. more obtainable for strictly new laid in small lots. The shortage in fresh eggs does not brighten the market for limed, which are dull at 14 to 15c.

HIDES—Green continue to be quoted at 4½c. for No. 1 cows'. Cured are rather quiet at 5c., an occasional car being disposed of at that figure.

HONEY—A somewhat better trade in extracted at 9 to 10c. is to be reported, while honey in the comb is steady at 14 to 16c.

HOPS—The range is 18 to 22c. for the grades in most common request. Small lots of extra choice stock bring as high as 24c.

ONIONS—Are not moving these days, the weather being too cold for business. Prices range from $2 to $2.50 per barrel.

POULTRY -Some improvement in receipts has taken place, but all find a ready demand, so that prices preserve their balance very fairly. Turkeys are 10 to 11c., geese 7 to 8c., chickens 45 to 70c.

POTATOES—Some check of receipts has been caused by the drop in the temperature, but as there was little demand at all events, prices have not been benefited by the decline in receipts. Cars on track are not worth more than 35c., and out of store lots 45 to 50c.

SEEDS—Good weather has given spirit to deliveries, and they are coming forward very liberally at steady prices. Alsike is $6 to $6.75, and red clover $5.25 to $5.50, with some addition for choice export grades.

SKINS—are quiet and unchanged at $1 to $1.05.

TALLOW—Rough is 2c., refined 5½ to 5¾c., with the ordinary movement maintained.

WOOL—Sellers are offering more freely as there seems but little chance of a higher price than 19c. being realized for fleeces.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

The value of hogs continues to appreciate, the argument for prices having turned 10c. in favor of sellers since last report, $5.85 being paid for select weights. According to size quotations run from this down to $.25, the lowest being for very light hogs. The advance has not by any means made them so liberal as to endanger the firmness of present prices, as several holders have refused to do business under $6. Packers have not been brought up to that point yet, however.

BACON—Long clear is easier at 7¼ to 7¾c., backs are 10½c., bellies 10c., and rolls 8½ to 8¾c.

HAMS—are steady at 10½ to 11c.

LARD—Canadian pure in pails is 9¾c., in tubs 9¼c., compound is 8 to 8½c.

BARREL PORK—Heavy mess is $13.50 to $14, and Canadian short-cut $15.50 to $16.

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO,

Little progress has been made in shipping since last week. The dull times cause some impatience among the millers, many of whom are carrying considerable stocks in expectation of a revived demand. Consignments have eased somewhat the strain of supplies on spot, but the flour that has gone out in this way does not command ready sale at the points to which it has been consigned. In feed prices are easy, but unchanged in quotation. A rather quiet business in these lines has been transacted.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are : Manitoba patents, $5.20 ; strong bakers', $4.88 ; Ontario patents, $4.40 ; straight roller, $4.75 ; extra, $4.10 to $4.15 : low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are : Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.25 to $5.50 ; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.80 to $4.85 ; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.75 ; straight roller, $4.00 to $4.05; extra, $3.80 to $3.85; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL—Oatmeal is worth $3.90 in carloads and $4.25 in smaller parcels. Cornmeal is quiet at $3.80 to $4.

BUCKWHEAT FLOUR—Is selling at $4.50 per barrel.

FEED—Bran is quiet at $15 per ton, and shorts at $16. Mixed feed is $23 to $25, cracked corn, $1.25, feeding corn 54 to 55c. in cars and 60c. in smaller lots, oats are 32 to 33c.

HAY—Is much more abundant and is easier-priced, selling now at $11 to $11.50 for timothy, and $10 to $10.50 for mixed.

STRAW—Is steady at $6 to $6.50.

MONTREAL.

FLOUR AND MEAL—The flour market continues dull and quiet with values more or less nominal. The stock in store shows a decrease of 6,390 barrels compared with a week ago, and 10,584 barrels compared with a year ago. We quote: Patent spring, $5 to $5.30; patent winter, $5 to $5.25; straight roller, $4.65 to $4.75 : extra, $4.30 to $0.00 ; superfine, $4 to $0.00; city strong bakers', $5 to $0.00; strong bakers', $4.60 to $4.90.

There is only a small movement in oatmeal at unchanged prices. The stock in store shows an increase of 1,007 barrels compared with a week ago, and 2,387 barrels compared with a year ago. Standard, per bag, $2.10 to $2.20 ; granulated, $2.10 to $2.20 ; rolled, $2.10 to $2.20.

MARKETS—Continued.

FRESH MEATS—Beef forequarters are 4 to 6c., hindquarters 7½ to 8c., lamb 7½ to 8c., mutton 6 to 7c., veal 7½ to 8c. Receipts and offerings are liberal.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Trade has been somewhat brisker than usual this week especially in salt and dried fish, haddie, cod and herring being in strong demand. Fresh fish are quiet yet, but haddock are having a fair sale. The prices of oysters are somewhat variable, but the probability is that prices will shortly assume their normal position ; just now they are quoted from $1·30 to $1.50 and select from $1.60 to $1.85. Prices at Baltimore are on the decline. The trade in oysters has been brisk during the week.

Prices for canned oysters have been advanced in the Baltimore market to 70c. per dozen for 1 lb. 8oz. goods, with corresponding rates for other sizes. Some packers, it is reported, have been buying freely this week.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

SALT.

Two carloads of barrels at $1.20 and two carloads of sacs at 70c. show that the trade in salt, outward at least, is not so brisk as usual, yet prices are firm. The sales in small quantities have been good.

GREEN FRUIT.

The weather is a little too cold for shipping fruit, and that circumstance is felt as a deterrent to trade. In a small way orders are coming forward steadily, and prices are for the most part stationary at last week's points of quotation. Palermo lemons are $4 to $4.50, Messinas are $4 to $5. Florida oranges are $2.60 to $3.25, the re-packing of this fruit causing an advance in prices. Valencia oranges are $4 to $4.50, and improving in quality with new receipts.

DRY GOODS.

At present the wholesale houses are busily engaged in moving shipments of spring goods such as prints. A few orders for winter goods are yet being received. Payments are fair and spring orders are coming in, with good prospects for a good trade during the next three months. There have been very few failures among the retail dry goods men during the present month.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Jan. 28, 1892.

Trade does not show much improvement as yet, but the indications continue favorable, and some orders from travellers are commencing to come in, which are considered satisfactory. Values all round show the same firm tendency noted last week. There has been continued cutting in teas, but regular dealers are not altering their figures. Prime lines of dried fruit maintain their level despite the further offerings of low grades from New York. On the whole, the conditions are favorable, and if the returns so far are a sign, payments are improving.

SUGAR.

There is only an ordinary movement in sugar, no change in the condition of the market occurring since our last report. The wholesale men have pretty fair stock on hand, but are not urging business to any great extent. Raw sugars continue firm, and this has the effect of making refiners somewhat indifferent as to business. Yellows are quoted at 3½ to 4¼c., while granulated remains unchanged at the former figure. Beet sugar has been quiet since the transactions noted in our last. Granulated is worth about 4¼c. and raw 3¼c.

SYRUPS.

Syrups are quiet, the demand being mostly for the American product, which is being laid down here at 24c., 60 days. This is considerably below what refiners are asking for the domestic product, and the cheaper goods naturally get the preference. Molasses has shown some improvement since our last, quite a number of 25-barrel lots having been moved on the basis of 35c.

TEAS.

Remarks regarding the competition of consigned Japans made last week may be repeated. Stocks of these teas worth from 12 to 14c. are heavy as already noted, and the holders of consignments continue their cutting, to the detriment of those who laid in their supplies earlier in the season. In black and green teas a fair trade is being done, especially in grades of the latter worth from 13 to 22c.

COFFEE.

Coffees are dull but firm, stock here being light. Rios have been turned over on the basis of 18 to 20c., with some Jamaicas at the same figures. We quote :—Rios, 15 to 20c.; Java, 26 to 30c.; Mocha, 27 to 30c.; Jamaica, 18 to 20c.; and Maracaibo, 23 to 25c.

RICE.

Rice is dull and unchanged. We quote :—Patna, $4.50 to $5; Japan, $4.75 to $5.00; standard, $3.90, and off grades, $3.50, all in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

There has been little or no change in dried fruits, which continue dull. The offering of low grade stock by New York parties referred to last week, have not affected the prices of prime fruit, which are as before, but they have checked the demand. Currants are unchanged. We quote prime Valencias 5 to 5¼c., currants at 5¼ to 6c. for Patras, and 7 to 8c., for Vostizzas in cases.

NUTS.

There is an ordinary jobbing business doing in nuts. We quote :—Walnuts steady at 12¾ to 13c., for Grenoble and 10½ to 11c. for Bordeaux ; Toicos, 12 to 13c.; Tarragona almonds, 14 to 15c.

CANNED GOODS.

While the demand for canned goods is not large, the stock in jobber's hands are small, the tone of the market firm. Advices to dealers here from the coast are that all the salmon has been moved, and holders B.A are asking better than $1.30, while outside brands are held at $1.27½, some holders refusing to sell at these figures. Tomatoes have been well placed and are expected to be in good demand together with other vegetables in the near future, as the retailer's supplies must be getting small.

GREEN FRUIT.

There is a fair jobbing business in green fruit. Florida oranges are the most active line, selling at $3 to $3.50 per box. Valencia stock is quiet at $3.75 for 420's, $4.25 to $4.50 for 714's per case. Lemons are the same as last week, viz., $3.50 per box.

APPLES.

There is an ordinary jobbing trade in apples at steady prices, which rule $2.50 to $3 per barrel. Dried fruit is dull at 5 to 6c., but there has been demand for evaporated, several car lots having changed hands at 8c. during the week. This line is all controlled by one dealer here, who is holding for high prices, and we quote 8 to 9c.

FISH.

The only business in fish during the week has been in some fresh trout and white fish. The former move slowly at $4.50 to $4.75, and the latter $6.25.

HOPS.

There is no change in hops, an occasional bale moving now and then. We quote bulk 18 to 25c. Pressed goods have a steady movement at 15c., 3 per cent. off.

PROVISIONS.

A good demand developed in pork during the latter part of last week. Dealers awoke to the fact that stocks of American were very light, and when they went to look for Canadian packed, they found that two local operators had secured a corner, having secured not only the larger portion of the short cut already packed, but having placed orders for the turnout of the packers for some time to come. As a result the packers showed more anxiety to buy dressed hogs, which advanced to $6 and $6.10 per cwt., while pork was marked up 25 to 50c. per bbl., the consequence being a sharp demand for a few days. The market is quiet now. We quote :—Canadian short cut, per brl. $15.75 to $16.25; mess pork, western, per brl. $15.00 to $15.50 ; short cut, western, per brl. $16 to $16.50; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c; bacon, per lb. 9c. to 10c ; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¼ to 8c.

CHEESE.

There has been nothing of importance doing in cheese since last week. The supplies here are in small compass, less than half what they were last year in fact, and holders insist on their own figures, which makes business slow. We quote prices ¼c. firmer at 11½ to 11¾c. The Liverpool cable stands a shilling higher than it did last week at 57s.

BUTTER.

Butter shows no change. There is a steady jobbing in all grades at old prices. We quote:—Finest creamery, 24 to 24½c.; finest Townships, 18 to 20c.; Morrisburg and Brockville, 18 to 19c: finest Western, 16½ to 18½c.

EGGS.

The egg market continues dull and prices are somewhat easier, although not quotably changed at 15 to 16c.

POULTRY.

The receipts of poultry are light, and the enquiry for choice dry picked stock is good. Chickens are in especially good demand, 9 to 10c. being freely paid for choice stock. Turkeys are bringing 9 to 10c. and ducks at 7½ to 8½c. Geese are not in such good enquiry, 6 to 7c. being about the idea.

GRAIN.

The grain market remains lifeless and prices are nominal on spot. Wheat is dull, receipts in Manitoba and the North West continue light, but advices state that values have a lower tendency. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago show a increase of 16,556 wheat, 600 corn, 62,630 peas, 26,496 oats, 2,479 rye, and a decrease of 104,134 barley. Compared with a year ago there is an increase of 195,874 wheat, 103,744 peas, 40,531 barley, and a decrease of 11,624 corn, 164,460 oats, and 8,659 rye. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04; peas, 73 to 74c. per 66 pounds; oats, 34c. to 35c. per 34 pounds in store, corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 45 to 46c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Jan. 28, 1892.

Last week's dulness continues this, with the prospects of improvement very little better, in fact it is a waiting market in all lines.

FLOUR—The conditions of the flour market are unchanged, only for immediate use is all that is moving, and quotations given last week are the selling prices this. Manitoba patents $5 90 to $6, Ontario high grade $5.20 to $5.30, medium patent $4.95 to $5.10.

CORN MEAL—is without change, the demand is light and prices remain steady, quoted $2.90 to $3.

OATMEAL—The market has been well supplied, prices are unchanged, though the tendency seems downward, and is selling at $4.65 to 4.75.

FEED—A limited quantity moving, prices remain steady, shorts are quoted $21.50 to 23 per ton. Oats 42 to 45 per bushel. Hay is still scarce.

SUGAR—The market is firm at the recent advance. Granulated is quoted 4½ to 4⅝c. yellows $3.55 to $3.85.

CHEESE—Are going off fairly well, the price is unchanged, 11c. seems the ruling figure.

BUTTER—Is unchanged either in price or quality offering, of course some really first class is offering, though the larger quantity is only fair in quality. Prices are the same as last quoted.

FISH—Our market is very nearly bare of all kinds of fish.

THE SWEETEST ISLAND IN THE WORLD.

At its broadest part the pear-shaped island of Mauritius is twenty-eight miles in breadth, while at the stalk, which points to the northward, it is thirty-eight miles in length. We are told that the near approach to the island cannot be made without evidence of its sweetness. As one sails or steams inside the great coral reef that everywhere surrounds, like a "barbed under-wall," Mauritius, "the Wonderful," and arrives at the harbour of Port Louis, the principal city of the island, the sweet odours float outward to greet him.

On being pulled ashore in a small boat, the visitor distinctly recognises the sweetness of sugar; on landing at the quay, which lies at the end of a broad street, called the Place of Arms, he finds himself in the midst of gangs of Indians engaged in shovelling sugar into bags, themselves the while standing kneedeep in the damp stickiness of it. Piled all about him, to the number of thousands, he sees bags, puffy like pillows, with sugar in them. As he stands thus, he will see and hear a railroad train go rushing across the Place of Arms laden with sugar.

If one arrives in a mail steamer he will find the Custom-house wharf crowded with men, all eagerly discussing the news about sugar brought by the mail. If "sugar's up," they wear smiling faces and go off joyfully to grow and make, and buy and sell more sugar; if "sugar's down," there will be long faces and little mirth, and the groups will dissolve, one by one, "the poor fellows putting up their parasols and tramping off through the glaring sun to their place of business."

The sweetness of Mauritius can be believed in, when it is understood that something like one-tenth of all the cane-sugar of the world is made there. The number of sugar estates is not easily estimated, for the reason that one owner may return a number of estates as his sugar estate. The smallest plantation on the island contains one hundred and twenty-nine acres; the largest, over five thousand An acre under canes produces, on an average, two thousand five hundred pounds of sugar. The quality called "gray" is shipped to Bristol or Glasgow to be refined, a cargo often consisting of three million pounds.

The white sugar goes largely to Bombay and Australia, and is a very profitable article, the difference between brown and white being caused by the addition of water when the syrup is in the turbines, where it rapidly crystallises. The more water added the whiter the sugar, as it washes out the coloring matter. The sugar bags are made from the leaves of the cocoa palm, and are imported largely from Madagascar, five hundred miles distant.

When a sugar estate is mapped out, the first thing to do is to divide the land into cane pieces. About four hundred feet constitute a cane piece. This has a road all about it, and stumps, stubble, stones, and lava boulders all over it. There is no place, even were it desirable, to pack this rubbish on, and so it is gathered into rows of walls at intervals of about six feet. These walls run the length of the field, and sometimes are six feet in height. On the cleaned spaces between the walls, the cane pieces, eighteen inches long, are planted at intervals of two feet, manure having been put into each hole. The soil is then lightly scattered over the canes.

In a short time twenty or thirty young sprouts appear from each hole, and the entire piece assumes an emerald hue. When the sun's rays are very hot the tender growth requires shading by leaves. Much labour is expended before the canes are ready for cutting. The soil is frequently broken up to admit air and moisture; all the enemies of the cane are closely watched; eighteen months go by and then comes the harvest. Before that time arrives the stalks have attained a height of from eight to fourteen feet. At this stage of growth the arrow shoots up from a single slender stem several feet above the plume of leaves, which terminates each cane. This is the cane flower, a delicate feather of silvery purple, which in one night "transforms the fields into a sea of nodding purple, across which the trade-wind passes in a series of gracefal undulations." When the arrow withers and falls the canes are ripe and ready for cutting.

The sugar of Mauritius, owing to the prodigious boiling and baking of the soil in the past, to the climate and the sun, is the sweetest sugar in the world, and has invariably taken the first prizes at the international European exhibitions, as well as in England.—Confectioners' Union.

COMMERCIAL AGENCIES AND CREDITS.

At a recent meeting of manufacturers at St. Louis the question of "Commercial Agencies and Credits" was discussed. A number of well known and successful business men were heard, and through their representatives several commercial agencies were voiced in the debate. The business men without an exception criticised the agencies on account of misleading reports sent out by them; the cause of which the merchants thought was the fact that the majority of correspondents for commercial agencies in small towns were cheap men, none of whom were overpaid for their services and whose services were, in many instances, the result of guessing. A system that would pay correspondents better would command a higher rate from business men, the merchants agreed, and gave it as their opinion that that would be found to be the solution of the difficulty.

Representatives of the agencies advanced various reasons for the errors they sometimes made, one making a point by declaring that merchants who were creditors of dealers were often very apt to get commercial agencies wrong when they made inquiries. All hands agreed that dishonest men could not always be kept track of, but could not unite on a method for procuring the best possible service.

The belief that travelling salesmen were careless about inquiring into the standing of new customers was advanced by the collective agency representatives and virtually admitted by the merchants.

If this is true, then the system is wrong, for no man is better calculated to learn the financial condition of his customers than the travelling salesman. He is on the spot and can make any necessary investigations, and can furthermore put questions to his customer that would be evaded or not answered if asked by the local correspondent of a commercial agency. It is to be expected that some men will object to answering questions with regard to their financial standing, but responsible men rarely will when approached in a business-like manner, and who is so well equipped to ask these questions as the travelling salesman who has succeeded in getting near enough to his customer to take an order for goods.—Ex.

A reputation for truthfulness is indispensable to permanent and satisfying success.

SALES MADE OR PENDING.

Mr. J. Gosnell, Victoria, B. C., has sold out his grocery business.

A. H. Wardell, grocer, Toronto, has sold out to his wife, M. J. Wardell.

J. H. Walker, general merchant, Alma, Ont., has sold out to G. B. Wray.

W. D. Atwell & Co., general merchants, Norman, Ont., have sold out to Monsette & Sethrington.

Ramsay Bros., manufacturers of confectionery, Victoria, B.C., have moved to Vancouver and bought out the business of the Vancouver Candy Factory.

The notice in this column of a change in the business of Robertson & Cliff, grocers, Dunchurch, Ont., was, through the omission of the words "one of," made to convey an error. That firm has not closed up both its stores at Dunchurch, but has put the two stocks into one, closing but one of its stores.

PARTNERSHIPS FORMED AND DISSOLVED.

The firm of Robert Thompson & Co., commission merchants, Winnipeg, has been changed to the style of Thompson & Co.

FIRES.

J. W. Grant, confectioner and fruit dealer, Meaford, Ont., was burnt out last week.

Mr. C. Meyers, grocer, Meaford, Ont., lost $700 by a fire which occurred on Tuesday last.

Thursday evening an alarm was sounded for a fire in M. Lang & Son's pork packing establishment, Guy street, Montreal. When the firemen got on the scene the blaze was under good headway, and was subdued with difficulty. It had started in the smoke room, and the contents of this part of the establishment was destroyed. The damage to stock is placed at from $4,000 to $5,000, covered by insurance.

A hot coal stove was the cause of a serious fire in the grocery store of Mr. John Moule, London. It had evidently been smouldering for some time before the heat inside burst the front windows, allowing the dense smoke to escape in volumes. The loss will all fall on the stock, which was burned considerably and then drenched. The loss will probably be $500.

Among the sufferers by the two great fires in Montreal, on 20th inst., were Messrs McLean & Campbell, produce merchants, and Messrs Leonard Bros, fish merchants. Both these firms will lose heavily from water and smoke, as the fire was confined to the top flat of the building.

J. G. Hearle, the toilet soap man of Montreal, who recently assigned, owes $16,000.

D. J. Leahy & Co., wholesale and retail grocers, Halifax, N. S., have suspended payment.

The general stock of the Balmer estate at Gravenhurst is expected to finally work out at 100 cents on the dollar.

S. Marotte, spice merchant, Montreal, is reported to have compromised with his creditors at 75c. on the dollar.

A. W. Crysler, general merchant of Delhi, who assigned to Campbell & May of Toronto, owes $8,000 and his assets are nominally $1,000 less. Up to December last the business was conducted under the firm name of Crysler & Stoddart. When the latter withdrew, the finances were in a crippled condition.

THE VALUE OF APPEARANCES.

It appears to other trades a grocer's success depends more than we imagine, upon the general appearance of things connected with his business. For instance, if his wagon goes about town muddy, unpainted and in a rickety condition, it indicates to his customers that he is a very shiftless manager. If his store is untidy, unpainted and unwholesome in its interior appearance, it does not help to sell his goods, though they may be quite as good as those of his competitor's over the way. The unwholesome look of his premises conveys the impression to customers that his goods are of an inferior quality, and they bestow their patronage elsewhere. A good turn-out is a splendid advertisement for a grocer. Ladies do not like to have spavined horses and rickety conveyances stop at their doors. Much in regard to a grocer's success in trade depends upon the manner in which he keeps up a show of good appearances.—Grocers' Criterion.

AN ANTI-TREATING CIRCULAR.

The Travellers' Circle of Canada wish to call your attention to the system of treating and being treated to intoxicating liquors when transacting business. We are pleased to note that this custom is now by many entirely avoided; yet some are led to continue it, perhaps fearing that to discontinue a practice they have followed for some time might affect the success of their business. We believe no merchant will allow himself to be biassed in the placing of an order by a treat from the traveller who visits him; but we feel the practice in the past has sometimes been adopted in the hope of so influencing the customer, and some travellers who have practiced it have been gradually led into the use of intoxicants to such an extent as to injure themselves, while in some cases it has resulted in the loss of their situations and suffering to their families.

In these days of keen competition a traveller sometimes finds his sales not equal to his anticipation, a spirit of despondency is apt to take possession of him, and if he is susceptible to the influence of alcohol, has taken some with his customers during the day, he is likely to indulge further at night, when he meets his fellow-traveller, after his customers have gone home.

We ask retail merchants to give this matter their careful consideration, remembering that many of these young men have come from homes where parents, sisters and brothers are anxious about there welfare, or perhaps a young wife, who has confided her all in him, has high hopes of his success on the road, trusting he may soon secure promotion or establish a business for himself and continue for her a comfortable and happy home. Kindly abstain from being a party to any course which, if indulged in, will wreck all these high hopes, and leave the victim a nuisance to society.

It is individual effort that counts, and, every man should recognize that he has a responsibility on this question.

Signed on behalf of the Commercial Travellers' Circle of Canada.

R. M. STEWART, President.
E. FIELDING, Secretary.

COMPETITION SELF-DESTRUCTIVE.

Competition is war. It may be war to the knife, fierce and deadly ; it may be a contest with foils and masks, or padded gloves. At times it is waged at every point relentlessly ; again it is confined to a single phase of contact ; but, however conducted, in its essence, it is war ; and when carried to its extreme conclusion it means financial ruin to one or the other of the contestants. In the present industrial strife, a universal competitive warfare exists. A new and exaggerated impulse has been given to the violence of competition. Men rush to and fro in the market-places, and the world is distracted by their contests ; the fallen are found on every side. Is this persistent warfare a blessing or a curse? Is competition as it now presents itself a force to be encouraged and developed, or to be put in harness and controlled?

The history of the English common law shows that fundamental changes in its principles and rules have been introduced from time to time to meet the requirements of advancing civilization. Such progress has been cautious and slow. But revolutions—have done the work. As an example: The practices of "engrossing" (buying up large quantities of grain with intent to sell again), "forestalling" (buying or contracting for food on its way to market), "regrating" (buying grain or other food and shlling it at, or within four miles, of the same market, so as to raise the price), were made the subject of a penal statute in the year 1552. But in 1845 it became obvious that the ancient theories would no longer answer, and the statute was repealed. The law was reserved to meet the enlarging demands of the commercial public.

The repeal of restrictive laws and the substitution of absolute freedom in business methods—leaving producers and dealers to fix their prices as they could, subject to unrestricted competition—was a revolution indeed. As the power of competition was perceived by economists and statesmen, it was adopted as the panacea for all industrial evils. It was clearly adequate to the control of wages ; for the supply of labor had generally exceeded the demand, and by the introduction of labor-saving machinery was constantly increased. The production of goods at a heavy profit immediately led to the establishment of numerous rival manufactories. It could even control the price of food, by importation from countries having a surplus. Competition was welcomed as the world's deliverer. That it was sure to keep prices down was a sufficient argument; that it was equally sure, in the end, to breed industrial calamity by forcing prices too low, was not perceived ; the few who foretold the danger were ridiculed.

The 19th century has been dominated by this idea ; interference with absolute freedom in competition has been frowned upon and condemned. Laws have again and again been devised to prevent the least amelioration of competitive conditions.

It seems probable that if Adam Smith were to live again, to-day, he would be quite surprised at the result of some of the theories which he took a prominent part in formulating. We have become accustomed to the organization of labor everywhere. The price of labor is no longer a market-price, established by competition, in which every applicant for work is let alone to make his bargain with his employer ; it is controlled by a vast network of trades unions. All manner of manual workmen who regard themselves as skilled laborers have combined against their employers, and the world, to minimize the effects of competition. Every year discloses progress in this direction.

Manufacturers of every kind are found agreeing among themselves to control the constant tendency to depress prices below a just remuneration for inbested capital and skill.

So with coal exchanges, insurance companies, millers, miners, railways, and a host of other industries, not excluding the farmers. Unquestionably such combinations afford opportunity for great economies in the process of manufacture and distribution by means of which prices to the consumer have again and again been materially reduced. The saving of waste is a factor of great importance.

Unrestricted competition, as an economic principle, is too destructive to be permitted to exist; it has been pushed away from every industrial calling. Would it not be well for Congress, state Legislatures and courts to cease their futile attempts to maintain unqualified freedom of competition, and recognize the right of every industry to combine, under proper supervision, and to make agreements for the maintenance of just and reasonable prices, and the prevention of the enormous wastage consequent upon the war-like conditions of destructive competition? —Aldace F. Walker in the Forum of December.

THE MOLOCH OF MODERN BUSINESS.

It was once a custom to offer sacrifices to Moloch. The offerings to this gentleman were not of jewelry, vegetables or cash, but of human lives, served up on a hot coal or in a bloody basket. The altar of this man-eater was a shamble, in which the patriarch and the babe, the rich and the poor, the wise man and the fool, went into ashes and mincemeat without fear of a coroner's jury. We are fortunately living in better times. The butcher's shop is closed, and Moloch is out of business. The modern man is no longer served on a gridiron or a plate to a cannibal god. We are, however, doing some occasional whittling on the old block. In a refined and conventional fashion we are offering sacrifices of time, health and mentality to a modern Moloch. This last and improved edition of the man-eater is Overwork. We live in a rapid age. The clock is too slow and the days too short. We spread a mile of life on a yard of time, and by burning the business candle at both ends the light goes out in the middle instead of at the bottom. Business is a race-horse seldom in the paddock, but mostly on the track. Everything moves under the spur and whip. No nation in the world is covering ground as quick, and in no other can we find such a list of over-worked, exhausted and disabled men. This fact has been overlooked. In the totals of progress we have forgotten the invoices of human life. The commercial and industrial structure is immense and magnificent. We spread printer's ink in statistical Te Deums, and are patriotically proud of our national supremacy. But under the superstructure is a catacomb, and on the back page of business statistics an extended list of lunatics and invalids and a growing pile of undertakers' bills. Attention has frequently been called to this fact by physicians and publicists, but the underground railway to asylums and cemeteries is still running on time and paying dividends.

In the modern conditions of business, it seems to be necessary for some men to be sacrificed for the rest. They are pivotal in their different vocations. When the king-pin is missing the wagon stops. Such men labor beyond the limits of reason and the endurance of nature. Life is a file of invoices. Rest is simply an anxious man sandwiched for a few hours between two sheets, with broken nerves, delinquent health and spells of sleeplessness and nightmare. Artificial remedies are resorted to, in order to postpone the usual catastrophe. Opiates, capsules and stimulants are used to stop the cracks in a leaky ship, with the usual finale, in a heavy cargo and a dead captain. There may be an excuse, but there is no disguise for this fact. It is deplorably common. Overwork is becoming a public enemy. When business men are conscious of its encroachments on their vitality, they should wisely call a halt, not forgetting that even in this age of cupidity a bank account and a big business is no offset to premature exhaustion, a soft brain and a short life.—Age of Steel.

Was born near the famous White Sulphur Springs, Virginia. In my experience of 40 years found these and other mineral waters to possess many good qualities, but among all found St. Leon the most powerful to regulate the system and promote jolly good health and pleasant feelings. St. Leon is really charming. J. H. Gill, Smith's Ready Reminder, Toronto.

CERTIFICATES OF STRENGTH AND PURITY.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST,

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar-Refining.

The test by the Polariscope showed in yesterday s yield 99·90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

JOHN BAKER EDWARDS, P.L.D., D.C.L., F.C.S.,

Public Analyst for the District of Montreal, and Professor of Chemistry.

CHEMICAL LABORATORY, MEDICAL FACULTY, MCGILL UNIVERSITY.

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Company:

GENTLEMEN,—I have taken and tested a sample of your "EXTRA GRANULATED" Sugar, and find that it yielded 99·88 per cent. of Pure Sugar It is practically as pure and good a Sugar as can be manufactured.

Yours truly,

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The Patrons of Industry have tried their political strength in Halton, a constituency which they were reasonably warranted in regarding as a stronghold. They have several lodges scattered among the townships of that county, a considerable number of prosperous and prominent farmers have been drawn into the Association and given it enthusiastic support. It was supposed that the numbers and agricultural wealth of the Patrons in Halton made them a stronger power there than in any other county. At the last bye-election they put a candidate in the field. He represented an undivided opposition to the former representative of the riding, and therefore would be naturally expected to enlist in his support all the elements of opposition to the Government candidate. He was not simply leading a wing of the opposition alongside of a great party nominee, but was running with the strong advantage of being the only candidate in the field against the late member. He would consequently get a large measure of support, not because he was a Patron, but because he was an opponent of the Government candidate. The Liberals might be expected to make a stout fight, as at he general election they were only 104 behind, so that the Patron candidate had some signal advantages in his favor.

But he did not win. He simply demonstrated that the power of his faction was not merely zero, but was a negative quantity of very considerable subtractive value. At the general election, a Liberal opposition, unadulterated with any Patron ingredients, was capable of coming within 104 of victory. At the recent bye election, the opposition was beaten by 444. That is, the opposition which centred round a Patron candidate was 340 short of that which centred round a purely Liberal candidate. The efforts of the Liberals would naturally be much stronger at this election than they were at last, as they had made a good stand before, had protested successfully, and had fair reasons for believing that they would come closer to, rather than fall further short of, victory. All this should make them struggle harder, and they would almost certainly have done better rather than worse than they did at the general election if they had not allied Liberalism with Patronism. If the opposition candidate had run on a purely Liberal ticket, he would have got all the support of the Liberal party and probably as many Patrons as the defeated candidate got. But the Liberals would not all go out to vote for a Patron candidate. Hence the Patrons in Halton are a factor that diminishes instead of increasing the strength of the Liberal party there.

The political platform of the Patrons must be considered, along with their theory of trade, to show what headway they are likely to make in attracting members. Their political profession of faith includes some propositions that appear to be at variance with each other from the standpoint of either of the great parties. They want British connection maintained in one article of their platform, and they want unrestricted reciprocity with all countries in another; they want the Senate abolished; they require that customs duties shall be imposed only for revenue, never for protection; they would greatly extend municipal power over all officials in the services of the county; they want the machinery of government to be greatly simplified. A platform with such planks as these in it is certain not to find very general adoption. Its parts would be considered irreconcilable with each other by either Liberals or Conservatives. The progress of the Patron movement must therefore be as much retarded by the political dogmas to which its supporters must subscribe, as by their theory of trade upon a 12½ per cent. margin profit and a strictly cash basis. There are very many men who would refuse to join the Patrons on account of their political platform who would readily connect themselves with them if the association were merely a co-operative buying concern. The Patrons have certainly some strong opponents in Halton among the political party that was supposed to back up their candidate unanimously in the last election.

The irreconcilable elements in the Patrons' political platform, the visionary and impracticable reforms contemplated in it, must necessarily limit the number of people who will join the association, while the difficulty of raising the cash pre-supposed in their scheme of trade must be rather a severe principle of selection for any large proportion of the farming or industrial community to belong to it. Add to these factors the unwillingness of merchants to surrender their independence as traders, and the obstacles in the way of the Patrons ever amounting to much will appear to be too considerable to be left out of the calculation. The economic impossibility of any association of consumers controlling prices through its subjugation of the retail stratum of distribution is of itself a hindrance that cannot be got over. It is plain, therefore, that the Patrons cannot last and increase. It is satisfactory that so far they have not been able to derive any factitious strength from politics. If there had been any moment when times were so bad in this country as to hurry any large proportion of the voters to adopt the Patron platform on the eve of a general election, it is conceivable that a section of representatives of that association, too numerous and solid to be despised, might be able to obtain concessions, as the price of their support, that would be very inimical to independent trade. It is very well that Halton did not make the mistake of sending a propagandist of Patron principles to the House of Commons.

THE NEW PRESIDENT OF TORONTO BOARD OF TRADE.

MR. H. N. BAIRD.

"Nothing ventured nothing won."

The immense wealth which measures the value of the grain grown in the fields of our Canadian farms every year passes on its way from consumer to producer through the hands of a comparatively small number of leading distributors. These men, standing on the very watershed of the market, have to keep the supply of money running one way and the supply of grain the other. To preserve the due balance of these two contrary currents has proved too hard a problem for many a clear head, and failure to do it has made financial wreck of many a fair fortune. The mechanic usually can rely on getting his barrel of flour, and the farmer seldom fails to get the market price of the moment for his wheat, but the big grain merchant very often does not get back all the money he used to bring the material one step in the series of exchanges in the transfer from farmers' granaries to consumers' tables. The grain merchant who does business on any scale of magnitude has to be very wary that he does not get caught, but the large operator has to show the courage of his convictions by putting up, and often keeping up, very costly pledges. Wide and correct information, insight into the market, foresight, nerve and venture, are the chief attributes, which, backed up by capital, are the requisite foundation for a successful experience in grain-buying.

MR. H. N. BAIRD.

Mr. Hugh N. Baird, the new President of the Toronto Board of Trade, is one of the best known grain merchants in Canada, the length of time he has been in the business and the extent of his operations combining to give him a place among the foremost of those who deal in that class of merchandise. Though but slightly past middle age Mr. Baird has had a continuous experience of twenty-five years in the grain and flour trade. During that quarter of a century he has seen a big expansion in the grain production of the country, and perhaps no man has taken sharper note of the influences that have helped to foster this increase, and has been readier at all times to help them along. The part played by railway extension in enlarging the area of production, the experiments which determined the selections best adapted to special soils and climates, the opening up of markets, the protection of native growers and millers—in all these he took an interest, often a very active part. In such ways and by the use of his own capital year after year, Mr. Baird illustrates how much public good a man can do who follows up sagaciously and conscientiously his own private commercial interests. Such services would not be rendered by individuals under a system such as the Patrons of Industry contemplate—a system which, carried to its legitimate issues, would extinguish all distributors that were not specially retained brokers of consumers.

The firm of which Mr. Baird is a member—Messrs. Crane & Baird—do business in grain and flour both in this city and in Montreal. Mr. Baird himself has operated very largely at all the leading grain marketing centres in the United States, and did last year an enormous business in corn, shipped in bond from the Western States to Montreal and thence exported abroad. He is interested in several manufacturing industries in Paris, Ont., notably in woollen mills, carpet factory and grist mills. All these are very successful works. He is on the board of several financial, railway and insurance companies, holding that office in the following particularly :—The Midland Division of the Grand Trunk Railway Co., The Western Assurance Co., The Millers' and Manufacturers' Insurance Co. For two years he was second Vice-President of the Toronto Board of Trade, for one year he was first Vice-President, and at the last annual meeting was elected President. He was Vice-President of the old Corn Exchange.

Mr. Baird is a Canadian, having been born in the town of Cobourg. His education he received at a private school in Montreal. His public record is one that might be expected of his Canadian birth and education, and although he has never taken any part in politics he was always to be found on what he deemed to be the right side of every movement for the welfare of this country. Notably his attitude on the National Policy was one of strong advocacy before it was obtained, and has been of staunch support since its inception. He took a very prominent part in the campaign which resulted in the adoption of a protective tariff. Particularly was he identified with the agitation which led to an increase of duty on flour, thus enabling Canadian millers to compete with the cheap stuff of the Western States. He at present strongly favors closer trade relations among the parts of the British Empire.

Mr. Baird enters upon his duties as President of the Board of Trade at the head of a very good administration. In Mr. Hugh Blain he has a very capable first Vice-President, who has given thoughtful attention to the chief problems that are likely to come before the Board ; Mr. S. F. McKinnon will undoubtedly fill the office of second Vice-President acceptably ; a strong Council is in office ; and Mr. Baird is an able and experienced man himself. It is well that a man of his views upon the trade question should be the successor of Mr. John I. Davidson, who strongly advocated such internal commercial union as is practicable among the parts of the British Empire. This theory of the best way to solve the problem of trade that is engaging the attention of Britain and the colonies just now, finds an equally strong supporter in Mr. Baird. It is probable that delegates to the Congress of the Chambers of Commerce that is to meet in London this year will be appointed to represent the Toronto Board of Trade. Many other mattters besides that of closer union will be considered at that Congress.

NO SLEEP TILL MORN.

THE most superficial observer it must be plain that the grocers of this city like the sensation when they once get into the giddy whirlpool of pleasure, but they do not begin by at once giving themselves up to its intoxicating movement To soberer joys, before "the glad circle round them yield their souls to festive mirth," they first address themselves. This attunes their spirits to the more gleeful measures that are to time their enjoyment when they get after "the glowing hours." They sip before they take the draft which drains the cup. This temperate way of letting themselves out by degrees, husbands their powers and increases their capacity for enjoyment. When they once get into the thick of the festivities they can hold down the floor till a later hour than if they had begun with unchecked hilarity. They enjoy "the poetry of motion" all the better for having had a little of the prose of inactivity. So, at all events, it seemed on Thursday night, a week ago, when the beauty and the chivalry of the Toronto grocery trade met in Harry Webb's parlors to enjoy the annual At Home of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association.

The concert was a fitting prelude to the ball. It was under the capable management of Mr. Alex. Gorrie. The numbers were well calculated to while away the early part of an evening which was to close with dancing. The concert further answered the purpose for which it was devised, in affording abundant entertainment to those who did not choose to remain for dancing. It was of about the right length, being of not more than two hours' duration. The talent was excellent, and the evening glided on pleasantly, though not too swiftly for the nimble feet that ached to be marking time to the music of harp, flute, violin and clarionet.

The following programme shows the plan and indicates the nature of the entertainment during the former part of the evening:

PART I.

1. Quartette (a) "Estudiantina," Lacome; (b) "Robin Adair," Scotch.

5. "Job Lots," ——.

MR. RAMSAY.

6. Quartette (a) "Cruiskeen Lawn," Stewart; (b) "Good Night Beloved," Pinsuti.

ARION QUARTETTE.

Miss Fannie Sullivan, Accompaniste.

At the close of the concert the company betook themselves to the ball-room, whose brilliant lights, gay hangings and wax-paved floor, backed by the inspiriting strains of the music, soon had their way. The bevy of fair ladies besieged by eager candidates for the favor of a dance, soon had their programmes filled, and everybody's toe that could find a partner and room to swing in was light and fantastic in no time. It was a merry gathering. The orchestra, Sig. A. G. Glionna's, did its part well. Over three hundred persons participated, and the enthusiasm didn't begin to wane till about an hour before cock-crow, when the echoes of the ball died out and the last carriages wended their way homeward.

The following was the programme in the ball room:

Credit for the very enjoyable time that everybody put in from first to last must be given to the Committee which had the matter in hand. The members of that committee were indefatigable workers, both in the preparations for and the conduct of the At Home, and very gracefully they did the honors, looking after everything with real concern for the general enjoyment of each member of the large company. The music, the refreshments and the rooms, were all that could be desired. The following made up the committee: Messrs. A. G. Booth, P. J. Mulqueen, Jno. Butcher, R. H. Stewart, Robt. Barron, Alex. Sinclair, D. W. Clark, J. G. Gibson, Robert Mills, A. E. Saunders, A. R. Williamson, Jno. Westren, H. W. McCulloch.

The beautiful concert and ball programmes, the former bearing a portrait of President Booth, were the work of James Bain & Son.

THE OFFICERS OF TORONTO ASSOCIATION.

The new President of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association, Mr. A. G. Booth, is one of the active workers of that useful body. His connection with it began when it first came into existence, and he was one of the men to whose exertions its coming into existence was due. He, with one or two others who approved the idea of union among Toronto grocers, went around among the trade and obtained the signatures of those who were willing to organize. Since the Association was formed he has been a steady member of it, a constant attendant at its meetings, and has been in office as a member of the Committee or as Vice President from the outset. He accepted office as President much against his wishes, as he is one of the sort that would work just as zealously in the ranks as in command.

Mr. Booth served on the side of the North in the American War, was in one or two actions, but considers that the real hardships of the soldier are not touched on in the story of an engagement. The life of privation that he is forced to live in the interval between actions, when rations are both scant and coarse, when the weather is soaking or parching, when good water is hard to get and camp distempers are rife—all these conditions make soldiering a far from romantic pursuit.

Eleven years ago he opened in the grocery business on Yonge street, where he traded for six years. From there he moved to his present premises on the corner of Church and Maitland streets, where he does a smart business on the ideas that he upholds in the Association. He is a Canadian by birth, but has lived a good deal on the other side of the line.

Mr. David W. Clark, the Vice-President of the Association, is a young man, now in the thirty-second year of his age. The fact that this is but the land of his adoption—for he was born of Scottish parents in South Africa—does not make his affection for Canada less ardent than if it were a native sentiment. Twenty-two years ago his family left the Cape, and he has ever since dwelt in this city. Thus the years of his life when he was most open to impressions, most susceptible to the moulding influence of his surroundings, were spent in Canada, and it is small wonder that his tastes, habits of thought and patriotic instincts became thoroughly assimilated to the corporate life of the country into which he was thrown so early. His training as a grocer was begun under Kinnear & Lang, continued under J. W. Lang & Co. and finished under Fulton Michie. His connection with the Association began with the founding of that body in 1885. He is an energetic member, goes in for making the Association of practical use to everybody in it, and is both a thoughtful worker and conscientious attendant at its meetings. He has traded for eight years on the corner of Bellevue Avenue and Nassau street, has built up a sound and extensive business, and will soon put his sign out before a larger store in a more prominent part of the city. He goes upon the right principles to succeed.

Mr. A. R. Williamson, the Treasurer of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association, has filled that office with satisfaction to his colleagues and credit to himself for the past four years. He also is one of the original members of the Association, and has missed not more than two or three meetings since the first one. Upon all questions for advancing the interests of the retailer he has always taken decided ground. He started in business eight years ago, beginning where he has since continued, on the corner of Esther street and Grange avenue. He had formerly been engaged with J. W. Lang & Co. Mr. Williamson believes thoroughly in the policy of following up good customers, and does not fail to visit his patrons regularly for orders. He objects strenuously to any business being done with consumers by wholesalers, and took an active part in pushing through any measures of the Association that were calculated to stop that evil in any of its forms. Mr. Williamson is an Irishman, he came to Canada in the year 1880, and has lived in Toronto since 1881.

CINNAMON FOR INFLUENZA.

Cinnamon has long been known as a delicate spice of which the exquisite flavor and stimulating properties are insufficiently appreciated here, though they are far more valued on the Continent. It has now, however, a fresh claim on the public attention, for M. Chambelland, of M. Pasteur's laboratory for the study of germs, has discovered that essence of cinnamon is the most powerful germicide as yet known, being even stronger for this purpose than corrosive sublimate. The following from the Paris correspondent of the Daily News gives the particulars as yet published :

"There would pretty certainly be a cinnamon boom if the experiment made with that spice by M. Chambelland in M. Pasteur's laboratory were generally known. Our ancestors, it appears, hit upon the best preservative from the the infectious microbe when they used to drink mulled wines and other beverages in which strong doses of cinnamon were infused. M. Chambelland now says that no living disease-germ can resist for more than a few hours the antiseptic power of essence of cinnamon. He looks upon it as not less effective in destroying microbes than corrosive sublimate. Even its scent kills them, and it does no harm to human beings. A decoction of cinnamon is often good to drink in localities where typhoid fever or cholera is rife."

To combat the approaches of influenza by adding ground cinnamon to puddings and tarts would certainly be a pleasant way of taking antiseptic precautions against the prevailing epidemic. Stick cinnamon burnt in the sick room has long been known as an agreeable deodorant, but in the light of the above it may very probably be that it was originally its real antiseptic use which suggested the idea. Essence of cinnamon in various forms is, of course, familar to us all, when added to conceal the taste of physic; but the essence itself, as a medicinal germicide, would be an agreeable cure. On the Continent, cinnamon is much more used in cookery than with us, and it is also supplied ready-mixed with sugar for sprinkling over cooked foods, pastry, etc.—London P. M. Review.

The annual meeting of the Port Arthur Board of Trade was held on 26th, George T. Marks, Aaron Squires, J. J. O'Connor re-elected respectively president, vice-president and secretary. Council—Messrs. J. Fraser, James Meek, W. J. Clark, Col, Ray. D. F. Burk, W. C. Dobie, W. J. Bawlf, F. E. Gibbs, George W. Brown, Herbert Shears, F. S. Wiley, Fred Jones. The president's report, amongst other things, strongly condemns the Ontario Government's late mining legislation.

A MODEL STORE.

SOMERS BROTHERS GROCERY.

On the south side of King, and one door west of John St., directly opposite the Arlington Hotel in this city, stands a grocery, which may be called a summary (without any attempt at a pun) of the many good features that usually can be brought together only by a canvass of several good stores. The most indifferent passer-by cannot but bestow a glance, if not a more lingering tribute of admiration, upon the attractive spectacle that nestles between the commonplace buildings which flank it. The store bears new assemblage of attractive features. The doorway is a deep recess, the door being set in as far as the back frame of the window. The doorway is spacious, admitting of a liberal display of such lines as may be shown outside. Light is unstintedly provided for by the ample window, the glazed door, and the big section of glass that forms a transom over the door. Instead of a background of sash, heavy double curtains tastefully looped, separate the window from the store.

The store was refitted a few months ago. The whole interior is finished in quartered oak, which gives a very beautiful setting to the stock. Solid counters, pannelled and carved by the best of workmanship, with the centre-piece on the former, and a broad fringe along the latter very greatly beautify the interior.

All the adjuncts of the shop are in keeping with its fittings. Handsome glass show cases are placed at intervals along the counters; the scales are brightly burnished; and in the centre of the main counter rests one of the Standard cash registers, for which Taylor, Scott & Co. are the Canadian agents. The register is a thing of beauty as well as a great convenience. In form it is a desk—a very neat little one, by the way—and is used by Somers Brothers where it is intended to be, that is, right at the point where the customer is to be dealt with. The customer the sign "Somers Brothers," and is the property of two young men named and related as the sign truly sets forth. An attempt to do justice to the spruce little store is made in the cut which illustrates this description, and the result is as satisfactory as any effect produced by a picture can be.

The front of the store is what first challenges attention from the outside. The window is a very deep one, which enables the dresser to bring perspective into play in building up the exhibit. A good deep window gives an appearance of distance and solidity that is a desirable effect in the display. The art of the dresser is varied very often in this window, always with care and always with felicity, as each overhauling produces a bright polish that oak admits of, run from end to end of the store. The shelving, also oak, is a series of handsome cabinets, very symmetrically arranged along the walls, and leaving a good stretch of space between the ceiling and their tops. Railings give to the top of the shelf-cabinets a finish that is very neat. These cabinets resemble the furnishing of a first-class drug store. Large mirrors of heavy bevelled plate glass face each other on opposite sides of the room, and are particularly attractive, deep-seated in their oaken casements. The papering of the room is in harmony with the woodwork, a very pretty bit of work being done on the ceiling and in the margins skirting the tops of the shelves, where an expansive border and ornamental comes forward, gives his or her order which is entered in the order book placed on this desk, the pay is taken, and the change made by the manipulation of the proper numbers, and everything is done without leaving the spot or turning round. Messrs. Somers Brothers are highly pleased with the Standard cash register.

But all the elegance of fitting and equipment would count for little if due taste and labor were not expended upon the display of goods on the shelves and in the window; and herein lies one of the strong points of Somers Brothers as grocers: they keep their stock in the strictest order, while they study and practise beauty of effect. Along the shelves are disposed package goods in a way that only an adept in stock-keeping could arrange them. There is really very great taste shown in this work, and no one arrangement is allowed to remain so long unchanged as ever to pall upon the customer. The picture speaks for itself.

Messrs. Somers Brothers believe in appearances all the way through,and turn out a handsome delivery waggon drawn by a fine horse. They find it pays. They consider calling for orders a necessity of any enterprising city business. Two days in the week one of the partners makes a tour of their customers. When they have had the trade of a householder for any length of time, they make it a point to keep it, if attention to business at the customer's house will enable them to do so, and they always keep a customer in sight though he does move to another part of the city. They do a very large business with families, many of whom,depending upon their regular calls, never come near the store. They are careful of their credit, and this has had its share in the success they have had during the six years they have traded in their present premises, from which they now do a snug business.

CARE OF THE CASH.

Assuming that the majority of store assistants are perfectly honest, yet many retail merchants run a chance of losing considerable sums by peculations of clerks, owing to neglect to properly supervise the financial department of the business. Too great reliance may be placed in the honesty of moderately or inadequately paid young men, who would never dream of embezzlement were not temptation constantly placed in their way. Chances of "knocking down," however, are considerably reduced when the proprietor acts as his own cashier, while time is saved and mistakes less frequently occur in making change. There is a young man employed in a wholesale dry goods house in this city, in a subordinate position, who a few months ago was in possession of a grocery store in an interior town, and had built up a very good trade among the best people in the place. Profits were good and everything appeared to be progressing favorably when suddenly the dealer failed. It was then discovered that his two clerks had been robbing him right along. There was nothing left for the unfortunate dealer but to go to work at a salary, and as his experience may be a warning to other merchants equally confident of their employes' honesty, we publish it for their benefit. Women often make excellent cashiers and bookkeepers, and if the services of the merchant's wife or daughter or other female relative can be secured for either position, and thus enable him to give his personal attention to other branches of the business, he will do well to make use of them until his circumstances improve sufficiently to allow him to employ an outsider, who should be put under bonds to ensure the employer against loss.—Merchant's Review.

CASH TRADE.

Jan. 25, 1892.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER:

SIR,—I notice in your last issue of THE GROCER, a few items with which I fully agree. One is "Cheap Cash Store," and another "Profits on Quick Payments." I came to this village about six months ago, almost an entire stranger. I started a grocery business and am running it on a strictly cash system, and I find it works satisfactorily. There are five stores in this village besides mine which are selling groceries, all of them doing a credit business, so that you will see my opposition was strong. However, the public in general are crediting and patronizing me for doing so, and even the merchants the same. But they say they can't do a cash business, but I am confident that all merchants can if they take the right way and stick to it. If such men would study THE CANADIAN GROCER and do accordingly, there would not be so many compromises and assignments, and the public would be better off at the end of the year.

Yours truly, C. G.

THE CARE OF BISCUITS IN STOCK.

Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—Kindly allow me space to suggest to the grocers, or rather some of them, that they pay too little attention to the care of their stock of biscuits. As one who has had some years' experience in the retail grocery trade in Toronto, as a clerk, and who now is manufacturing biscuits, I may reasonably be supposed to know a little of what I am writing about.

Many grocers imagine that any particular part of their store will do for the biscuit stock. This is not so. I often see them on the floor, dangerously near where the boy has sprinkled preparatory to sweeping, or near such articles as soap, coffee and spices. Biscuits should be kept perfectly dry; should not be allowed to be exposed to the strong smells and flavors of other goods, and should be kept as much as possible from the light. I would suggest also that they be kept in tins, whenever possible. Customers may with reason complain that biscuits they have just purchased are not fresh, when the truth is they are only a few days from the oven, but the grocer gave them so little care after coming into his possession that they really are "off." Every manufacturer of biscuits tries to send out, and I am sure does send out, fresh goods. Competition compels him to do so, but the grocer does not pay that attention to this part of his stock that the delicate flavors and nature of it deserve. Select a part of your store away from coffees, spices, coal oil, soaps, etc., and try the experiment. Always replace the covers on your tins or boxes, and see the improvement. Biscuits, like butter and such goods, will attract bad smells and contract bad tastes. Trusting this will be accepted in the same kindly spirit in which it is written,

FORT.

SHORT WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—Allow me space to ask the following questions regarding the oyster trade. Is it customary to buy five gallons of oysters, and when measured to receive only four? I have been dealing in oysters for many years and have surmised this before, but did not explain myself, but when the shoe pinches so tight I consider that there is no money in it, simply reality from the first waters. Therefore, I consider the sooner steps are taken to solve this mystery and find who is at the bottom of such corrupt practice in the trade the better. I might just ask if they are put up by the old measure, how is it that we are compelled to sell by Imperial? I find shortages in more goods then these, and how in the name of common sense are we going to pay one hundred cents on the dollar, if we don't receive it? If it was not for their honesty and economy it would be bankruptcy, bankruptcy all through the country merchants. Just look what we have to contend against: bankrupt stocks, opponents slaughtering goods,high freight, and shortages, but after all we are expected to pay dollar for dollar, and a little more. My advice is: See that you get it, then pay for it, but don't forget to take the GROCER.

I remain, yours truly,
A. B. C.

[The only way the grocer can do to save his profits upon oysters and to save himself from the consequences of violating the Weights and Measures Act, is to calculate his profits not on the quantity of oysters in the package but upon the cost. If he is charged with 5 gallons at $1.35, the total net cost will be $6.75. If he aims to make 20 per cent. profit, he will require to get $8.10 for the contents of the package, whatever they measure by his own stamped measures. If there turn out to be but four Imperial gallons, they will require to be sold at $2.02½ per gallon, which means slightly more than 50c. per quart. The trader must never assume that he has received full weight or measure in anything, but must sell on a basis of profit on total cost.—Editor.]

THE SUGAR AGREEMENT.

The very thoroughgoing measures adopted by the Guild some time ago for the suppression of cutting in yellow sugars were sufficiently drastic, but, as was foretold in these columns, they turned out to be impracticable. The remedy might have succeeded if it could have been administered, but it could not. Men drew the line at the oath. Some of the principals and the majority of the travellers would not swear. There is little wonder that they wouldn't. In the form of affidavit approved, a man had not only to bind himself to take no liberties with prices in the future, but in the same solemn article had to purge himself of having done so any time during the three months preceding that sworn declaration. This retrospective feature of the affidavit was a stumbling block. Few men could truly absolve themselves of the offence of selling yellow sugar at cut prices during the three months previous to the adoption of this arrangement. The consequence was, that few bound themselves in the terms of the affidavit, and cutting went on as usual, only being considerably worse since the swearing check was resorted to than it was before.

The Guild is now casting about to find some new scheme. The sugar agreement is nullified by the cutting on yellows to sell granulated, on the one hand, and on the other, outside wholesalers in some sections of the country are selling granulated below Guild prices. The present arrangement, though satisfactorily workable in the Province of Quebec, does not do here. It appears that the retail grocers of Ontario are strong men on a negotiation, and generally hold out till they get a bargain. In the Province of Quebec they are not such inveterate "dickerers," and it is possible to sell yellow sugar for the profits upon itself without making it a sideline to be sold below cost to force sales of granulated. Hence there has been less difficulty in the way of the wholesale grocers of that province carrying out the present agreement.

A new arrangement has been proposed for this province, and three of the local Guilds —Hamilton, Toronto and Kingston—have given it their approval. It remains to be seen whether the Guild as a whole will ratify it. The cause which immediately led to the proposal of this arrangement was the discontent of the Kingston Guild, whose members have had to meet the price-cutting tactics of a local firm which withdrew from the Guild some time ago. The proposed arrangement is that members of the Guild shall sell granulated in quantities of 15 barrels and over at cost, and charge ⅛c. per lb. more on smaller parcels. This is said to be satisfactory to refiners, who will agree to charge 30c. per hundred-weight more on granulated to wholesalers outside of the Guild. The object of this is evidently to make it worth the while of all wholesalers to join the Guild, as, handicapped by 90c. per barrel on granulated, a wholesaler cannot hope to hold his own against Guild merchants. Of course Guild merchants will make nothing on 15 barrel or larger lots, but then they will not be induced to cut on yellows to persuade buyers to take such large quantities of granulated. There will be a less quantity of granulated sold in large lots, there will therefore be more sold in small lots, and hence there will be ⅛c. made on more pounds. Also, there will be a much greater incentive to make some money on yellows, when there is no need to sacrifice them for the sake of business in granulated. The retailers' co-operation is provided for by a proposal to reduce the present prices by ¼c. per lb. on granulated, thus enabling him to sell easily 20 lbs. for a dollar without being compelled to buy 15 barrels to do so. He can do his sugar business with less capital and give popular prices; hence, he is not likely to be eager to buy granulated in 15 barrel lots when there is so little to be gained by so doing. The effect of the change is expected to produce an equilibrium; giving up the wholesaler's profits on 15 barrel lots, and removing the necessity for the retailer to buy these lots, thus limiting business to smaller parcels with profit to both classes of dealers. The prices proposed for this province in a meeting last week, and approved by the three local Guilds referred to, is 4⅝c. for 15 barrel lots of granulated, and 4¾c. for smaller parcels.

One or two wholesalers, aiming to anticipate the general adoption of these prices by the Guild, started to quote at 4⅝c. and 4¾c. Some business is reported to have been booked at these prices, but it is said that it must all be cancelled, as the Dominion Guild has not ratified the resolution of its local divisions that adopted these prices.

The alternative suggestion, failing the success or full adoption of the scheme described, is to drop the sugar list altogether, and a very general disposition favors that course, as it is certain that more money could be made by wholesalers under open prices than has recently been made under list prices.

Mr. J. Parkinson, who removed to Trout Creek in the Muskoka District from Exeter two years ago, was in the city for a few days last week. He is doing remarkably well. Besides doing a grocery and general store business he does an extensive jobbing trade in flour. Speaking of the Patrons of Industry, he said he was not troubled with them, but he did not think they would last long. Some time ago he met a gentleman who had travelled over Michigan, who told him that nearly every merchant who had signed the Patrons' agreement to sell at 12½ per cent advance on cost had eventually failed; now they could not get but few merchants to sell on their terms.

GROCERIES.

The pace of business has mended. It is of larger volume, but not more profitable than it was last week. To bring up trade to a really active state resort has been freely made to cutting. Lower prices rule for yellow sugar, syrups, Valencia raisins, currants and spices. Canned goods have held their own and teas have been steady. A very unsettled feeling, the result of uncertainty as to what action shall finally be taken upon the sugar list, prevails. There seems to be a rather despondent spirit abroad as well, the weather being fickle, prices drooping and the demand backward. This may be a temporary condition of things, and the mood which reflects the depression in trade may be but a passing one, as it is too early to become disgusted with the season's business yet. Once the sugar matter is disposed of things will right themselves, and a normal business may be depended on. The gloom inseparable from the fourth of February, though that is not so black-letter a day with the grocers as with the dry goods men, will pass away in due time. Stocks are low in retail stores, wholesalers are not loaded up in anything, teas being their fullest line, and for these there is ample room in the country. Money comes forward on account freely enough, but the accounts coming due now are not very large.

CANNED GOODS.

The stock of tomatoes in the country is believed to be very moderate. At all events the efforts of jobbers who have thought it worth while to try to obtain control of it have failed to bring out any considerable addition to the supplies suspected to exist. Good prices have been offered, and one holder who has 1000 cases, but won't name the hands, wants $1.10 for them laid down here. Others who have tomatoes have similar ideas as to their value, while some believe in holding on till everybody is willing to admit their value at $1.20. There is some talk of that figure being the approved quotation on all hands before long. Just now, nobody is willing to sell below $1,05, at which price firmness is an indisputable feature. Corn and peas are unchanged, the latter as scarce as ever and held at $1.10 alone, though assorted round lots are worth $1.05. Salmon quotes at $1.40 to $1.45 for Fraser River brands. Lobster is unchanged at prices quoted in Prices Current. There is very little trade current this week. Very small parcels are the rule, but there is a general gauntness about the aspect of the demand that gives good assurance of a big future business.

COFFEES.

The business in coffees pursues its usual course, the quantity sold being very moderate. Rios of the best grades are not plentiful, common descriptions being most plentiful and of course most in demand. Round lots of Rios are 16½ to 17c., ordinary quantities 17 to 18c. for common, and from that to 22c. for fine. Javas are higher in Amsterdam, an advance of ⅝c. per lb. being the last movement of that market.

DRIED FRUIT.

The prices of currants have suffered in the week's business, and stock has been sold as low as 5c. The sample is of the poorest, and represents the trashy stock of the market. For anything above this grade the very lowest price, and that not by any means general, is 5¼c. Good stock is held at 5½ to 5¾c. by the majority who have it. Valencia raisins have been brought to a 4¾c. basis. The best off-stalk Valencias are held at 5½c., while medium are 5 to 5¼c. Superior Malaga fruit is very scarce now, the bulk of what was in stock here having been cleaned up by houses who had run out. Prunes (new) are worth 6½c. in cases. In all dried fruits the tone of business has been rather low, though some activity was started by the easier prices with which the week opened.

NUTS.

The small business looked for at this time of year is not being more than realized. An odd order comes in, there is always stock to meet it, the price is steady, and that is all there is in the market.

RICE AND SPICES.

The price of fancy grades of Japan rice is stiffer outside than it was, and now nothing of that description can be laid down here below 5c. Some business in the finer grades of rice is reported. Ordinary rice is very quiet.

Spices are not attracting much attention. Black pepper is quoted lower in London than it can be laid down there for from Singapore. Cloves outside are flat, having proved a bad line of investment to London distributors. The failure of the Calicut crop has made prices firmer in ginger.

SUGAR.

Somewhat freer selling has gone hand in hand with increasing disregard of profits. Wholesalers have shown themselves willing to go farther to win a customer than they usually go, and there never was anything very cheese-paring about them when it came to a matter of selling granulated sugar. This week they have put in yellows as low as 3¼c. to make sales of granulated. Price-cutting has been the order of the week. Local guilds in this province had signified their willingness to agree to a new scale of prices for granulated, the particulars of which are given in another column. These prices (4⅝ and 4¾c.) were expected to be inaugurated last Saturday, but the sanction of the Dominion Guild has not been given to that arrangement. Some wholesalers, on the strength of what the local Guilds did sent round circulars with these low quotations, and now it is said they will be obliged to cancel the orders they got, as the ratification of the Guild as a whole is reserved, indeed this action of the eager wholesalers in question no doubt was one cause of the suspended approval of the central Guild.

Mr. Licht's report of January 16, 1892, gives the following estimate of the European beet sugar production of the 1891-92 campaign, as compared with preceding campaigns, as follows :

	1891-92.	1890-91.	1889-90.
Germany....	1,170,000	1,331,965	1,264,607
Austria	820,000	778,473	853,078
France	675,000	694,037	787,989
Russia	545,000	544,162	456,711
Belgium ...	195,000	205,623	211,480
Holland ...	50,000	61,307	55,813
Other countries	75,000	80,000	80,000
Together.	3,530,000	3,695,567	3,619,678

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.

Low grades of syrup are going at very low prices, native refiners coming down to meet the quotations of United States houses whose goods are finding fair sale on this market. Values are easy at 1¾c. for the lowest grades. Other varieties are unchanged at the quotations in Prices Current.

TEAS.

The one line on which activity is greatest is tea. Selling is easier in it than in any other class of merchandise handled by grocers, and concessions have not had to be made to buyers to induce business. Also, values are admittedly good without further reduction, stocks in retail hands are light, so that there is little need for any shrinkage in the margin of profit. From 15c. upwards business in blacks is good, a fair demand for Japans at 25c. and thereabout, some call for the lower priced Hysons—these are the leading features of the week's trade.

Messrs, Wm. Jas. and Hy. Thompson, in their Report, Jan. 21, says :—Importers have continued to sell freely, and the trade have gone on buying with a fair amount of confidence, knowing that the sales will shortly shrink to much smaller dimensions, That this will be so follows from the falling off in shipments during the last few weeks as it leaves importers with 3½ or 4 millions less to sell than at this time last year, and therefore, unconcerned to press sales, inasmuch as the season's supply will all be used unless the rate of consumption should be checked, as it was last year, by a considerable rise in value. The bidding at auction has not been uniformly strong, buyers often showing indifference towards the close of the sales, and offering low prices for inferior kinds of Pekoe, Broken Pekoe and Pekoe Fannings—especially for Calcutta-bought tea, of which the holders have offered no less than 36,000 packages this month—but for the fresh garden invoices very fair prices have been paid, and only for the lowest sorts have rates shown unsteadiness, while for the finest Assam and Darjeeling growths prices have gradually hardened. Taken as a whole, the teas now coming forward, though less showy in leaf, have more fulness and flavour than at any time this season, and should pass readily into consumption. Supply: Shipments to 16th inst. were 97½ millions, against 90 millions last year. Sales to date are 829,000 packages, against 703,000 packages sold last season, leaving the quantity to come to market from 40,000 to 45,000 packages less than a year ago.

MARKET NOTES.

In this week's advertisement Messrs. Smith & Keighley announce the first arrival of new season Cairn's marmalade.

The orders from Manitoba and the North West for both wet and dry groceries are quite large this week.

Lake fish are not as abundant as buyers could wish for. Wholesale grocers had enquiries from the States, in answer to which they could not offer.

PETROLEUM.

There has been no change in prices. The shrinkage in daylight is causing a decline in the volume of business.

The Petrolia Advertiser in its report says: Petrolia crude $1.29 per barrel, Oil Springs crude $1.29. Very little excitement is ever expected in the trade generally at this time of the year, and thus little uneasiness is felt at the quietness which at present pervades all branches of the business. The demand for crude is not very lively, but the indications for a boom later on in the year are sufficiently cheering to encourage the holders to keep the market firm. Transfers that have been made during the week range from $1.27 to $1 30. Refined moves rather slowly, but no change in prices since our last issue. The refiners are all running, however, and expect a pretty average spring trade. Operations in the producing territory are being pushed forward vigorously, and every set of tools in the district are as busy at work as they can be. No wells of any importance outside the average, however, are reported.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The butter market remains very favorable to sellers who have good butter to dispose of. Commission merchants and buyers could take care of a liberal supply of the right grade if it were forthcoming. As a centre of distribution direct to consumers within easy reach, this market is capable of taking much more choice stock than it receives, while inquiries from without show that the demand could be relied on to find room for all that the domestic dairies are producing, if only it were all of fine quality. Choice tubs are exceptionally scarce, and fancy dairy in small parcels could be turned over for 19c. High grade dairy tubs somewhat below superfine are readily taken at 18c. Not much of any class of tub is coming forward but what is marketed goes at 16 to 18c. Large rolls come in freely and do not improve in quality. Faults of both color and flavor are common, good sweet stock being the marked exception. They find fair sale at 14 to 16c. Medium lots of rolls are in request in the east, and change hands occasionally at 14c. None of the inferior roll butter now coming to hand is likely to accumulate and deteriorate, as there is a sufficient consumptive demand to take up most of it soon after it is in store. There is little low grade stuff on the market.

Cheese is firm at 11½ to 12c. for prime late fall stock. No other class is in request, but early summer makes are in stock at 9 to 10c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES—A wide range of quotation is still observed, as owing to the uncommonly healthy condition of all apples this year, soft stock has kept better and is marketed later than any former winter. This goes at $1 to $1.50. Good, hard, well packed stock for export is worth as high as $2.50, and the outward movement is kept up with rather more profit this week to shippers.

BEANS—The dull market there has been for weeks has at length developed more freedom in offering, with few sales at the figures asked, viz., $1.15 to $1.20 for round lots. Ordinary traders' lots are $1.35 to $1.40.

CRANBERRIES—Sales are rather slow, though the price is easy at $7 per barrel, and $3 to $3.25 per crate. Offers of both Jersey and Cape Cod stock from holders at central points show that the supply can be easily replenished at very reasonable prices.

DRIED APPLES—It seems impossible to create any interest in the market, buyers being too indifferent to be sharpened up by the backwardness which still characterizes the supply. Large lots outside would bring 4c., while 4½ to 4¾c. are the ruling prices on spot.

EVAPORATED APPLES—The stock in first hands appears not to be exhausted. Round lots on track are good for 7½c., while smaller parcels here are 8 to 8½c.

EGGS—Fresh eggs are worth 17 to 18c., and are but fairly plentiful. For limed the price is steady at 14 to 15½c.

HIDES—A little more activity is the only news there is to report from the hide market, a few sales of buffs at 5c. f.o.b. having been made. Green are unchanged at 4½c. for No. 1 cows'.

HONEY.—Extracted moves slowly into consumption at 8 to 10c. Sections are steady at 14 to 16c.

MARKETS—Continued.

HOPS.—Buyers have been letting the market alone for sometime, and only small quantities at 18 to 22c. are moving. Large lots could be bought at easier prices than held a week ago.

ONIONS.—In bags Canadian onions are quiet, but with rather more firmness than they had a week ago at $1.25.

POULTRY.—A somewhat better supply than came forward last week is to be noted, though deliveries were not large enough to tell materially for any time on prices except those holding for chickens. Turkeys are 10 to 10½c., geese are 7 to 8c., chickens 40 to 60c. per pair.

POTATOES.—The best price for carloads on track is 35c., with fewer buyers open to take stock. Out of store prices are 45 to 50c.,

SEEDS.—Declining receipts of alsike tell improvingly in the price, which rises to $6.75 for superior quality seed, and ranges down to $5.50. Red clover is also less plentiful; westernOntario seed is worth $5.25 to $5.50, while northern and eastern are $5.50 to $5.75.

SKINS—Sheepskins are higher, going at $1.05 to $1.10. Calfskins are quiet at 5 to 7c.

TALLOW—Refined at 5½ to 6c., and rough at 2c. are selling in the ordinary undemonstrative way.

WOOL—Fleeces are not offering freely and are in less request at 18c.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

No indications of easier values are to be observed in the present position of the market. Sellers have advanced since last week and have brought packers up with them, $5.90 to $6 being paid for receipts, which have been coming in rather sparingly. Sellers are apparently of the view that packers must buy, and are asking bids, not being content to name present prices. Buying on Montreal account is giving spirit to the market. Products are steady and unchanged.

BACON—Long clear is active at 7½ to 7¾c., with 7c. bid for cars ; smoked backs are 10½c., bellies 9½ to 10c., rolls 8½ to 8¾c.

HAMS—The market is quiet at 10½ to 11c.

LARD—Canadian pure is 9c. in tubs, and 9¾c. in pails. Compound is dull at 8 to 8½c.

BARREL PORK—Mess is $13.50 to $14. New Canadian short cut is $15 to $16.

FRESH MEATS—Easy prices prevail. Beef forequarters are 4 to 5c., hindquarters 6 to 7½c., lamb 6½ to 8c., mutton 5 to 6½c., veal 7½ to 8½c.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Oysters are quoted at $1.30 this week, having receded from the high price, and are not again liable to an increase, as the cold weather is about over in Maryland. All kinds of fish are selling well at present, and large quantities have been placed on the market during the past week.

SALT.

The sales in car lots have been smaller than usual this week, only two carloads being moved. The pork packers are taking very little at present, but the trade in smaller quantities is very good and prices are firm.

GREEN FRUIT.

Milder weather has favored freer shipping and the run of orders has been freer. The week's trade is therefore to be reported as fairly satisfactory. Messina lemons are $4.25 to $4.75, and Palermos are $4 to $4.50. Florida oranges are firm at $2.75 to $3.25, and Valencias at $4 to $4.50. Bananas are $1.50 to $1.75.

DRY GOODS.

There has been little change during the past week. A large number of buyers are calling on the houses for the purpose of looking over the spring goods, and sales are fair, while orders from travellers are fairly good. The weather has been all that could be desired, and while trade has not been great, yet no particular complaints are made.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Feb. 4, 1892.

There has been no important change in the general condition of trade since our last letter, but as we have noted previously favorable indications referred to from time to time since the opening of the year are being verified. The grocery houses have their travellers all out now, and reports from them up to the present are satisfactory and bear out the above. As to change in values, etc., there are few to note. Sugar is about the same, teas is steady, and dried fruit more active; while other lines, with the exception of pork, furnish no important change.

SUGAR.

The demand for sugar is only fair, and since our last, although refiners are not admitting the fact, they are not quite so strong in their ideas. Some cutting is reported on yellows for which we note a somewhat lower range, viz : 3¼c. This move was induced, no doubt, by a desire to attract some business, and has been in a certain measure successful. The basis for granulated is unchanged at 4½c. Advices do not sight any change in the raw sugar market. But sugar remains as before with granulated about 4¼c., and raw 3⅛ to 3¼c.

SYRUPS.

The movement in Canadian is very small. There is considerable offering at 1⅝ to 2¼c., but buyers are apparently giving their attention to the American product, which is said to be of good quality, and quite a few lots of it have been turned over during the week at 24c.

MOLASSES.

Molasses is moving out fairly well at 25 and 50 bbl. lots, but business has not been so active as a week ago. We quote Barbadoes unchanged at 3⅝c.

TEAS.

There is no change in the tea market. Fine and middling are not plentiful and in demand, but the large supply of low grades offering still unsettles the market. Sales of round lots of these have occurred since our last, the terms of which are kept private, but it is undoubted that considerable cutting is still being done. Green teas show a firmer tendency in consequence of stronger advices which quote a penny a pound higher.

COFFEE.

Coffees furnish nothing interesting for the week. There has been some business in Rios and Jamaicas from first hands during the week on the basis of 18 to 20c. We quote:—Rios, 15 to 20c.; Java, 26 to 30c.; Mocha, 27 to 30c.; Jamaica, 18 to 20c.; and Maracaibo, 23 to 25c.

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO,

Inquiry for car lots of flour develops slowly into actual business, and is a very off and on matter at the best. Accumulation continues to be the uppermost condition of the market, and dulness is the ascendant feature. Feed is but little more active than flour, business being limited to local wants of the most average character. No especial constructive activity calling for any large output of feed is now going on. Prices rule easy.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are : Manitoba patents, $5.20 ; strong bakers', $4.85 ; Ontario patents, $4.40 ; straight roller, $4.75 ; extra, $4.10 to $4.15 : low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are : Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.25 to $5.50 ; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.80 to $4.85 ; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90 ; straight roller, $4.00 to $4.05; extra, $3.80 to $3.85; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL—In cars oatmeal is steady at $3.90, and is $4.25 in smaller parcels. There is no change in cornmeal, which quotes at $3.80 to $4.

BUCKWHEAT FLOUR—Is fairly active at $4.50 per barrel.

FEED—Bran is steady at $15, and shorts at $16 to $17 per ton. Mixed feed is $23 to $25, cracked corn $1.25, feeding corn 55 to 60c., oats 32c.

HAY—Is in moderate demand at $11 to $11.50 for choice timothy and $10 to $10.50 for mixed.

STRAW—Is quiet at $6 to $6.50.

MONTREAL.

The business in flour is confined almost wholly to a small jobbing movement. The stocks in store show an increase of 6,390 barrels compared with a week ago, and 10,584 barrels compared with a year ago. Patent spring, $5 to $5.30; Patent winter, $5 to $5.25; straight roller, $4.65 to $4.75; extra, $4.30; superfine, $4; city strong bakers', $5; strong bakers', $4.60 to $4.90.

OATMEAL—The oatmeal market continues very dull with no change in prices. The stocks in store show an increase of 1,007 barrels compared with a week ago, and 2,387 barrels compared with a year ago. Standard, per bag, $2.10 to $2.20; granulated, $2.10 to $2.20 ; rolled, $2.10 to $2.20.

FEED—The feed market is quiet and without change. We quote bran $16 to $17; shorts $18 to $19, and moullie $25.

ST. JOHN, N.B.,

FEED—The market is unchanged, and demand is up to expectations, last week's quotations are the ruling prices this.

RICE.

The rice market is quiet with an ordinary trade doing. Prices from first hands are unchanged as follows:——Patna, $4.50 to $5; Japan, $4.75 to $5.00; standard, $3.90, and off grades, $3.50, all in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

Dried fruits have shown some improvement since our last, as indicated by the business from first hands, which is brisker than it was. Prime Valencia raisins have been turned over in fair quantity at 5c. This movement has afforded holders some encouragement and induced a somewhat steadier feeling. Currants show a fair degree of activity and values have a steadier tendency under some fair turnovers that have occurred. Prunes are beginning to attract some attention. The bulk of the stock offering here consists of Bosnias, which are quoted at 5¼ to 5½c. Figs are offering at 10c. and dates at 5c. We quote prime Valencias 5 to 5¼c., currants at 5¼ to 6c. for Patras, and 7 to 8c. for Vostizzas in cases, Bosnia prunes 5¼ to 5½c., figs 10c., and dates 5c. per lb.

NUTS.

There is little to note regarding nuts which rule steady under a quiet business. We quote :—Walnuts steady at 12¾ to 13c., for Grenoble and 10½ to 11c. for Bordeaux ; Toicos, 12 to 13c.; Tarragona almonds, 14 to 15c.

CANNED GOODS.

While there is not a large business doing in canned goods a fair jobbing movement is to be noted, tomatoes, corn, and other vegetables mostly inquired after. The market on the whole is very firm under small stocks for this season of the year.

GREEN FRUIT.

There is a steady jobbing trade in green fruit but nothing striking to mention. Valencia oranges are in somewhat better inquiry at $3.50 to $3.75 for 4 20's and 4.00 to 4.25 for 7 14's. Floridas furnish a steady movement but are easier at $2.50 to $3 per box. There are more lemons offering this week and we quote prices somewhat lower at $3 to $3.25 per box.

APPLES.

There is a steady quiet trade in apples at the same prices and we quote $2.50 to $3 per bbl. Dried apples rule dull at 5 to 6c. but remarks made last week about firmness in evaporated can be repeated we quote 8 to 9c.

FISH.

There is no change or improvement in fish and aside from some business in trout at $4.50, and white fish at $6.25, values on staple lines are nominal in the absence of transactions.

HOPS.

There is no demand or business to note in bulk hops, which we quote unchanged at 18 to 25 cts. Pressed goods have some speculative movement between jobbers on the basis of 15c.

MAPLE SYRUP.

Some of last seasons syrup has made its reappearance on the market, and some fair business has transpired in it at 65 to 75c.

PROVISIONS.

The firm feeling noted on pork last week is maintained. The demand is good, but it is hard to obtain stock and prices are stronger. Canada short cut being held for $16 to 16.50. Lard and smoked meats are dull and neglected. We quote :—Canadian short cut, per brl. $16.00 to $16.50 mess pork, western, per brl. $15.00 to $15.50 short cut, western, per brl. $16 to 16c.50; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c ; bacon per lb. 9c. to 10c ; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¼ to 8c.

CHEESE.

The Liverpool cable has advanced a shilling since our last report, standing now at 58s., and with gradually diminishing stock, it is natural to expect firmer prices. We quote values nominal at 11½ to 11¾c., but some holders are holding for higher figures.

BUTTER.

Butter has been active in a jobbing way, under a good call in this connection for all choice grades. The finest creamery moves at 24½c. Western dairy at 16½ to 17c. Townships at 20 to 21c.

EGGS.

The egg market is quiet ; a few small consignments of mixed stock are coming to hand aad sell at 16 to 17c., new laid stock being worth 10c. Montreal limed are selling at 15 to 16c. There are also a few small lots of fresh laid stock selling at 30 to 35c. per dozen.

POULTRY.

The receipts of poultry were so small today that it was almost impossible to get correct quotations ; but the following figures give a good idea of the market : Turkeys 9 to 10c., chickens 8 to 9c., ducks 8 to 9c., geese 6c. to 7c.

GRAIN.

Grain is dull and unchanged; stock in store show an increase of 16,556 wheat, 600 corn, 62,630 peas, 26,496 oats, 2,479 rye, and a decrease of 104,134 barley compared with a year ago, and an increase of 195,874 wheat, 103,744 peas, 40,531 barley, and a decrease of 64,460 oats and 8,659 rye compared with a year ago. We quote: No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04 ; peas, 73 to 74c. per 66 pounds; oats, 34c. to 35c. per 34 pounds in store, corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 45 to 46c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Feb. 3, 1892.

Most of the wholesale grocers are busy stock taking, and consequently are not looking for much improvement in business the present week.

BREADSTUFFS.—In flour the market is unchanged either in prices or quantity moving, and quotations are same as last week. Cornmeal also is without much life, the prices have a downward drift, is quoted $2.85 to $2.95. Oatmeal is selling about same as last reported. Several lots have been placed on the market during the week, which has filled local demand. The price quoted is $4.60 to $4.70. Split peas are selling at $4 to $4.20; white beans, $1.60 to $1.70 ; whole peas, $1.60 to $1.70.

SUGAR—is in fair demand without any change in quotations.

EGGS—are dull with market well supplied, the price is about 16 cts.

FISH—A small cargo of fresh pollock and cod were offered last week; they were quickly disposed of, the selling price is 2½ to 3c. Dry cod are not to be had at present. Pollock also are very scarce.

SALES AT SUCKLING'S.

One of the most representative gatherings of the dry goods and clothing trades ever seen in the city assembled at Suckling's warehouse last Tuesday and kept up a brisk and sprited bidding for the trade stocks offered. The insolvent estate of Isaac Simon, Brantford, amounting to $5,692.21, was bought in by a brother of the insolvent for 66 cents on the dollar ; and the estate of H. Simon, Brantford, representing a gross of $5.452.09 was knocked down to Gough Bros., of Toronto and Brantford, at 57¾ cents on the dollar. Both these debtors assigned to J. D. Ivey & Co., wholesale dry goods, Toronto. The hardware stock of F. C. Cubitt, Sarnia, amounting to $6,600, was sold to S. Tatham, of Listowel, at 55c. on the dollar. Simpson & Co., dry goods and millinery, Dresden, in liquidation, are to be sold out on Feb. 9th, the stock representing a total value of $5,547.32.

The December report of the Great Northern Railway shows $384.461 increased earnings over the corresponding month of the preceding year. The increase in earnings for the last six months of 1891 amounted to $1,511,322 over the corresponding half year of 1890.

BOXES FOR SHELF GOODS.

The following article from the Ironmongery has many useful suggestions for the general merchant who carries shelf hardware in stock:

"In the multitude of counsellors there is safety," and, where the counsel is based on experience, there is much to be said for Solomon's proverb. We should all be wiser (which is the same thing, practically, as saying we should make fewer mistakes) if all human experience could be compiled in a sort of digest, as a code of laws or a body of judicial decisions is digested for ready reference. Lest this should seem a somewhat labored preamble in recurring to the topic of boxes for shelf hardware, let us say at once that it is prompted by the fact that, of the numerous letters we are receiving on the subject, many contain fresh suggestions to which the experience of the writers lends especial value. Even in so seemingly simple a matter, it is possible to adopt a plan that is not the best, and that might, therefore, be improved upon. Hence the more light we can get that is based upon practice, the better able we shall be to avoid initiating faults. That is to say, the more counsellors we have who can counsel from experience, the better for all concerned. The following communication from one who signs himself, "Another Ironmonger," will be found to contain several hints touching this matter, which will be new to those who have followed our articles on the subject :—

"I have been interested," writes our correspondent, "in the articles on 'Boxes for Shelving.' I have partially adopted the box system, too; but I don't use lids on the boxes at all. I consider a lid on a box a nuisance, particularly when you happen to be busy and have customers waiting to be served. For most goods lids are not necessary, at least my experience is so. As far as dust goes, boxes which gather dust are boxes which are very little used, and the dust a sure indication of dead or, at least, slow-going stock. Of course, goods easily tarnished will always be left wrapped in the original soft paper, and boxes containing miscellaneous sizes of one article, such as chisels, brace-bits, callipers, etc., will have the contents wrapped in paper likewise, so that there is no necessity for lids at all. Keys, plane-irons, bradawls, or any bright goods put in without paper can be dipped in oil to preserve them. I prefer to have each row of boxes resting on a shelf of its own, as it is much easier drawing a box off a shelf than lifting one box from under another; so that when I require two boxes in the height of one shelf space, I always slip in a shelf in the centre, and thus avoid having one box resting on the top of another. It is easy slipping in a shelf, by grooving the haffet or upright on each side, and slipping the shelf in the groove. It is best always to let the box have ¼ in. clearance in the height, so as to be easily slipped out and in. I find it a good plan to let the boxes project about 1 inch out over the edge of the shelf—that is, a box 11 in. long for a 10 in. shelf. One advantage of this is that the box can be drawn out instantly between fingers and thumb, without the help of any knob or ring. Another advantage is that where space is limited you get more room inside your box. The general appearance of the boxes done in this manner is just as neat as when they are flush with the shelving. I have some boxes made of wood, others of tin. The great advantage of tin is that you get more room, as a good deal of space is lost with the thickness of the sides, ends and bottom of a wooden box. I have got wooden boxes, 11 in. by 6 in. by 3½ in. over all, papered white inside and colored surface paper outside, for 4s. per dozen, without lids; those were got from a fancy box maker. I think now that tin boxes are best, and they do not cost much more I had some made 11 in. by 5 in. by 3 in. over all, with a division in each, for 6s. per dozen. These were wired round the edge, the wire being to the inside, instead of to the outside as is usual."

Another correspondent, who signs his communication, "Bertram," introduces to our notice still another form of box which he uses, and finds entirely satisfactory. "Having read," he observes, "with much interest most of the contents of your valued paper, especially the articles on 'Shop Arrangement," and, seeing that you invite remarks or sugestions, I venture to write you my experience, and describe my system of keeping stock in boxes. I quite endorse all that 'Marguerite' says, in your September number, as to the benefits of keeping brass foundry and other small goods in boxes, and have used them with profit for the last six years, only, instead of the cigar boxes, I procured the steel bound cardboard boxes, made by T. Bishop, Deritend Paper Box Works, Birmingham. These have many advantages over the kind mentioned by our correspondent, and are supplied at small cost, probably little more than is given for the empty 'weed cases,' and without the time and trouble spent in collecting, covering, and preparing, with the uncertainty of fitting shelves. Bishop will supply these boxes to any dimensions, so they can be arranged to best advantage for stock and existing fixtures, neatly fitting without waste of room. They can also be faced with any colored paper to suit taste; in my opinion brass work shows up best on white, accordingly I always choose that color, and as glazed paper is used, they keep clean for a long time. Being very thin (and yet strong) they take up much less room than wooden ones. The lids slipping tightly over them, the boxes are kept dust proof and quite clean, even though overfilled, in which case wooden ones would gape open; my boxes also save string, requiring none, thus saving time in opening and putting away."

"The cover is the same depth as the box itself, which explains what our correspondent says as to the contents being kept free of dust even though overfilled, for, though the contents might press up the cover considerably, it would still overlap the sides and end of the box itself. Of course the sample of contents must be attached to the end of the cover. The sample boxes in our possession are certainly strongly made, having the ends protected with steel strips. They can be made in any size.

"I have found small boxes preferable," continues Bertram, "a better assortment can thus be shown, and articles kept more separate. My fixtures are divided into eight sizes; the bottom three rows 7⅛ in. wide by 4¼ in. high at one end, and 6¼ in. by 4¼ in. at the other. The three next rows are, part 7⅛ in. wide by 8½ in. high, the others 6 in. by 8½ in. Above these are three 9¼ in. by 4½ in. at one end, the remainder 10 in. by 4½ in., all of which are 6½ in. deep; above these, and overhanging them 2½ in. are three rows of spaces, part 14¾ in. by 8¼ in., the remainder 17¾ in. by 8¼ in. high, both 9 in. deep. I have arranged three sizes of boxes to fit these, namely, 3 in. by 2 in. by 6 in., 3½ in. by 2 in. by 6 in., and 7¼ in. by 4 in. by 9 in.; it will be seen these fill all spaces without waste of room, excepting in the 17¾ in. by 8¼ in. by 9 in., which I fit with four boxes 7¼ in. by 4 in. by 9 in., and four 3 in. by 2 in. by 6 in., leaving a little waste room only behind the latter, others all fitting with just room to slide in and out easily.

"When first fixing on my samples, I found that by wiring them on, the wire cut through the cardboard, so to prevent this I tried the following plan which has auswered well. Place article to be secured on end of the cover in the position that best shows it, and, with a stout pin, pierce four holes through the end in the most suitable places for securing, then place a piece of 18 gauge tinned iron wire across the inside of the box lid end, next take some 24 gauge copper wire and stitch through one of the holes made, passing it over the tinned wire and bringing back through the other hole at the same end of sample, drawing tightly over and twisting to fasten and cut off wire; then perform the same operations through the other two holes, taking care always to pass the binding wire over the piece of tinned wire bar, this will keep the article shown firmly fixed in position, strengthen the lid end and prevent the wire cutting the cardboard. If this is carefully done they will last for years, saving time, room and money, and are easily kept tidy, the appearance giving a much better impression, with greater inducement to customers to select and purchase, greater facility in serving, and, in my humble opinion, preferable in every way to the old-fashioned way of keeping shelves half filled with parcels of various shapes and sizes, too often piled up in sad confusion."

THE DISHONEST TRADER.

Speaking of a recent failure at Vancouver, a gentleman informs us that the cause was "trying to beat competitors by selling goods at and below cost, with the result that he was wiped out himself." The Commercial Journal of last week contained an article bearing on the practice of certain wholesale men giving goods to men who depended solely upon these methods of doing business in order to secure trade. We pointed out the impossibility of any merchant doing business so as to treat his customers and creditors fairly and yet sell goods at and below cost. As an eastern exchange remarks, he must run his course sooner or later—length of time, of course, depending very largely upon his resources, and in less degree upon his methods. But during the whole course of his career he cannot be honest, and the sooner such men complete the process of self-strangulation the better it will be for the trade at large. Of course the better plan would be to never permit such men to get into business. In several wholesale centers in the east organizations are being formed whose aims and objects are to correct another form of abuse, that of giving indiscriminate credit. A well-known eastern wholesaler puts the matter in this light :—"It is the class who are doing business on other people's money we are after. A few days ago I had considerable trouble in collecting from a certain party, and I noticed whenever he paid his account he would order as much more on credit. I became suspicious and worked him up. I found he carried about ten hundred dollars' worth of stock, and was owing bills to the amount of about twelve hundred dollars in this city. I then concluded his was not the kind of trade I wanted, so I instructed my collector to push him and make him pay what he owed, and then let him alone, as he was doing business on our capital.—B. C. Hebert, elected by acclamation; second Vice-President, J. A. Cantlie; members of council, Messrs. Jas. Slessor, W. C. Munderloh, J. B. Learmont, Geo. Childs, C. H. Gould, R. Bickerdike, R. M. Esdale, Edgar Judge, J. C. Simpson, Geo. W. Stephens, A. Nicholl, and J. B. McLea. Members of the Board of Arbitration, J. Hodgson, J. P. Cleghorn, A. F. Gault, Andrew Allan, Robert Archer, Hon. G. A. Drummond, Robt Reford, F. W. Henshaw, Hon. J. K. Ward, Chas. H. Gould, Wm. Wainwright and John Kerry. A vote of thanks was moved to the president and retiring officers for the able way in which they handled the business of the Board for the past year.

It is surprising what push and energy combined with sticktoitiveness, will accomplish. Less than a year ago three young men of this city, viz., Geo. W. Booth, Henry C Fortier and Charles J. Peter, bought out the Biscuit and Confectionery business of Wm. Hessin, and by the foregoing qualities, they have built up an immense trade. Their factory is running full blast with all the staff employed that they had during the busy weeks previous to the Christmas trade. They personally attend to the whole business, dividing the work amongst them that other men are paying strangers to do. Mr. Booth takes charge of the office, Mr. Fortier the factory, and Mr. Peter travels through Western Ontario and the North West. They are thus able to avoid the rocks that wreck so many concerns where the principals do not take off their coats and pitch in. The biscuits made by this concern, The Toronto Biscuit and Confectionery Co., are eagerly sought after by all grocers.

NEGOTIABLE PAPER.

The term "negotiable" as applied to commercial paper is likely to be misleading to those who are not familiar with the legal significance of the word. In effect it means such paper as may be transferred from one holder to another, like money, and become, in the hands of any holder at maturity, an absolute obligation on the part of the maker, to pay the sum called by the note. In other words, the element of negotiability cuts off all defenses which might be made by the maker, except the validity of the note itself.

Thus negotiable paper, by reason of its immense value as a circulating medium, equal in utility, within a narrow sphere it is true, to money, is regarded with jealous care by the law, and is a privileged species of contract.

That which makes a note or bill negotiable, is the fact that it is an absolute promise to pay a certain sum at a specific time and place. The amount, the payee, the time and the place must be certain, and the promise must be absolute and unconditional, and the least element of uncertainty on any of these points will destroy the negotiable feature of the note. But it is not necessary that all of these things be certain upon the face of the note itself, for if, by the note, and without going outside of it these facts shall be capable of ascertainment at the time of maturity, then the note is negotiable, for at law that is certain which is capable of being made certain. For instance, the person to whom the money is to be paid, must be a certain and specific person. And yet this may not be, and in fact seldom is, the person expressed as payee in the note itself. In fact the element of negotiability is maintained for the purpose of facilitating its transfer from one person to another. But at the maturity of the note the holder renders the payee certain and definite by presentation for payment. A negotiable note may be made payable to bearer, for at maturity it will be ascertained who is the payee. As to certainty of amount, that must be specifically stated, as by no other means could it remain fixed during the life of the note, and on this the courts are strict. The rule that what can be made certain is certain is also applied to the time of payment. Thus a demand note is negotiable, because, while the time of the payment is not certain as expressed in the note it may be rendered certain by a demand. So, a note payable "on or before" a cetain date is negotiable, for although the time at which it may be paid is uncertain, the time at which it must be paid is certain. But a note payable upon a contingency which may not happen, is not negotiable. Thus a note payable when a certain person "becomes of age," or "when I marry" or a certain time after such an event, is not good, because the person may die before reaching his majority or being married. But if a note is made payable upon a contingency which must happen, such as the death of another person, or some other event which in the nature of things must happen, then it is good.

As to the date of a note, it is not absolutely essential that it should have any, and if it does, that date is not conclusive. If it bears no date it runs from the time it was made, which may be proved by other evidence. If it bears a date, that is presumed to be the date on which it was made, although if it was not in fact made upon that date, the actual date of execution may be shown. This is of special importance in those states in which a note made on Sunday is void, as the proof that a note was made on that day will prevail against the assumption raised by another date which may have been used. There can be, in the nature of things, no uncertainty as to the place of payment. If no place is expressed in the note, then it is payable on presentation to the maker, and although his exact whereabouts are sometimes considerably uncertain as a matter of fact, as a matter of the law uncertainty is not recognized.

As to the unconditional nature of the promise, there is an absolute rigor of rule The slightest contingency upon which the maker could legally avoid payment renders the note non-negotiable. It is intended, as was said, to take the place in commerce of money. There is always connected with it the contingency that at its maturity the maker will not be able to pay it, but this is the risk involved in a negotiable note. The addition to the promise to pay of any conditions or qualifications destroys at once the special nature of the paper and renders it a simple contract, subject in the hands of any holder to any defense which might have been asserted against the one to whom it was originally given.—St. Louis Interstate Grocer.

TRADING AND GAMBLING.

In the February Lippincott, Mr. Henry Clews, the well-known Wall street banker, says :

"There is an opinion, started by no one knows whom, and kept alive by parties who thrive only by the disaffection of certain classes, that Boards of Trade, organized for the purpose of dealing in farm products, and permitting transactions based on the calculations of operators as to the value of products in future months, up to six, eight, and even twelve months ahead, are hostile to the best interests of the farmer. Such transactions are styled 'gambling,' and when once this opprobrious epithet has been launched it is supposed to stick, and to fatally injure the character of the institutions that permit them to take place. It is an old maxim, that when once you have given poor dog Tray a bad name you can hang him without remorse or fear of consequences.

"Now, while it is very easy to stigmatize a purchase or sale of May wheat in the preceding November as gambling, it is difficult to prove such a charge. Gambling is betting on hazards, whose results are not only not calculated, but cannot be calculated with any reasonable degree of certainty. Thus, a person hazards a certain sum on the chances of a pair of dice turning up double sixes, or on the chances of a roulette-ball dropping into a hole numbering say twenty-five. The dice may turn up in any one of twenty-two combinations, and the roulette-ball may drop in any one of thirty-six holes. By no process of calculation can he estimate the probabilities of any of these events, and, while his chances may be one in twenty-one, or one in thirty-six, the dealer does not allow these odds, but cuts them down so that in the long run the dealer must win and the gambler must lose.

"The transactions of a Board of Trade are wholly different in nature and result. They establish prices, for the day, of farm products, based on the quotations of the markets of the world ; and they also give an opportunity to people who look forward, to deal in future supplies at prices based on the expectations of crops and consumption, These expectations are framed mainly from historical records, and are always within reasonable limits. But the main point to their advantage is this, that they all tend to the ultimate purchase of farm products, and the average of them all is in the average market price, which is established by producers and consumers all over the world. In other words, there are as many bulls as bears—as many people putting up prices as there are people depressing them; and therefore the farmer cannot be hurt, and, as a matter of fact, is not hurt."

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The Patrons of Industry are not incorporated. They are only a set of individuals in the eye of the law, and the closest voluntary organization cannot make them a collection having the rights and responsibilities that legally attach to one person. No special legislation is needed to make an individual eligible for his part in anything he puts his name to. The name is his, and it binds him if he signs it, but a name that a group of persons adopt as a common term must be legalized and its scope defined, before its stamp can hold the group answerable for anything they contract. Legal incorporation fuses them as it were into one body, to which all the constituent members then owe legal duties. Incorporation makes an association of persons an individual in the eye of the law. But the Patrons of Industry are yet only a loose assemblage of persons, as destitute of any bond of legal unity as the particles of limestone from which the carbonic oxide gas is expelled are destitute of chemical unity. The Patrons of one lodge are not knit together into anything that it would be safe to make a contract with. One lodge is not more legally bound to a neighboring lodge than if they did not profess the same thing.

A shrewd business man will weigh this fact before he goes into any agreement with the Patrons. The officers may give what verbal guarantees they will, that all the members will deal only with the merchant who signs their contract, but what power have the officers to enforce that agreement? It rests only upon the honor of individuals, and in such agreement honor seems to be little more than a name for the resultant effect of the whims of the members. Also, what legal redress has the merchant if the Patrons carry out their contract but partially? And if his trade ebbs away until he does about one-tenth of what he did before he capitulated to the Patrons, can he obtain damages from the Patrons? Oh no. In the absence of this legal competence, can he persuade the officers to put to the agreement their names instead of the name of the order and the lodge? Let him once try. These wary managers of a co-operative buying club are not so optimistic upon the question of the honor of their fellows as to take upon themselves responsibility for what their fellows have promised. The foolish trader who makes terms with the Patrons has no guarantee that is worth a straw in business, that he will get all the trade which is pledged him. He may assure himself, however, that there is a very great deal of it that will filter through the agreement by way of many sieve-like consciences which are associated together nominally to uphold it.

Patron merchants are evidently seldom prepared to stand or fall by the support which the local lodge enters into a covenant to give. Those merchants want to get all the trade they can from non-Patron customers, and they will certainly find that they need all such outside business as they can lay hold of, if they make due allowance for the restrictions upon their profits and for the escaping custom that goes by one course or another to other stores. Hence, with a modesty that does credit to their cupidity, they very generally make a secret of their connection with the Patrons. The favored customers kindly engage to preserve the secret but it always leaks out. The necessity of making the contract a covert transaction is apparent to both parties. The Patrons see that the fact of their connection with any given merchant is likely to prejudice his standing with wholesalers, who are apt to regulate their confidence in proportion as the retailer looks after his profits. If the retailer's facilities for getting goods are likely to be limited by a contract with the Patrons, the latter are likely to perceive the wisdom of shielding the secret of such connection as much as possible. The merchant himself, on the other hand, aims to catch what non-Patron trade he can, and it is discreet to keep a close mouth about his being in league with neighbors of non-Patron customers to give the former always better bargains than the latter.

The need of incorporation may not be so seriously felt just now, as farmers have more money, or more money's worth in grain, than they have had for many years. They can therefore make a better attempt to carry out the cash requirement on their side of the contract than they usually can. But when money begins to get scarce, where will the retailer be who has tied his fortunes to a few consumers, a cash basis and 12½ per cent. profit? He will be in a very precarious position. Wholesalers want the cash always from a man who does a professedly cash business; if such a man cannot pay the money down for his goods, they are apt to reason that he never can pay, for he is not supposed to have any assets in book accounts. A trader who sells for cash and asks credit gives evidence of getting behindhand that makes him an ineligible candidate for credit at wholesale hands. So the Patron merchant who has to face a time when his customers have no money is likely to be brought to a standstill at such a time because he can get no goods. Even now there cannot be too much money afloat among Patrons in certain sections, for it is a fact that some lodges include among their members men whose total indebtedness on old accounts to local non-Patron merchants is several hundred dollars. Such men as these are always easily attracted into any concern that aims at injuring traders who have the enterprise to sail under their own colors. A very large number of the beneficiaries of the retail trade of the country may be looked for in Patron lodges.

THE CIRCULAR QUESTIONS.

It appears to take a long time to match with suitable answers the list of questions drafted by the meeting of Association delegates in this city last fall. Toronto Association has just got ten of the sixteen questions disposed of, and it is questionable if the discussion of the points raised is not too superficial to do any good. Discussion is probably the least material part of the matter. In the preparation for discussion lies the germ of all that is useful in any attempt to sift the questions submitted. Mere desultory talking towards a conclusion is one way of getting to a determination, but the possession of information is necessary before the right thing can be resolved, or before any party to the discussion can be earnest in his advocacy of anything. Such of the questions as came before the Toronto Association on Monday night would have received more thoughtful and useful answers if members had looked into the subjects of these questions beforehand. The questions relating to wholesalers selling to consumers were answered, but it is doubtful if the answers reflected the facts faithfully. The question as to bankrupts and bankrupt stocks is too large to be disposed of as an item in an evening's business. There is breadth and depth to the subject that cannot be compassed and fathomed by a few words, and it is a question that very closely concerns the whole trade. All the questions were taken up on Monday night as if the intrinsic matter of the questions were subordinate to the celerity with which they were disposed of. That is a mistake. Time should be taken; if it cannot be had in the course of a regular meeting, it should be provided for by a special meeting. Rushing important things through at the fag end of a lengthy session is not conducive to the best results. The importance of these questions is the more to be insisted on because they afford a platform which will bring the associations together. Heretofore each of these bodies has kept up a little eddy of activity on its own account. This list of questions tends to drain the energy of all into one clearly defined current, and its parts ought to be well considered. It should be a vinculum to bind many together.

TRAVELLERS AS COLLECTORS.

A commercial traveller is not only a salesman, he is a collector as well. It is seldom that there is any discrepancy between his returns in money and the sum represented by the total number of the receipts he has signed. Taken in comparison with the number of commercial travellers on the road, the number of those who have proved untrustworthy appears to be an insignificant proportion of the whole. Also, taken in comparison with the total amount of money handled by commercial travellers, the amount of such money that has been misappropriated is a mere bagatelle. It is to the credit of commercial travellers that their honesty in accounting for collections is thus so well attested by their record. The exceptions, however, to the general rule have been more frequent of late than in any former period for a considerable time back. Within the last nine months three or four grave instances of shortage in travellers' returns have occurred, and have led to the discovery of habits in these particular cases entirely incompatible with a strict sense of duty.

It is so exceptional for travellers to err in this respect that these examples will be likely to be pondered somewhat by employers. The confusion that is often made between cause and effect in the judgment upon such cases may be cleared away by a little reflection. Is the tendency of a young fellow towards expensive or sporting habits a primary or a secondary cause of dishonesty? It is a primary cause of dishonesty if it leads him in the first place to resort to crooked means of getting hold of money to indulge those habits; it is a secondary cause if it simply leads him to use money improperly that has come regularly enough into his hands. If it is a secondary cause it is an effect of, and is suggested by, money that he is trusted with. There is a wide difference in degree or in stage of depravity between the man who will "contrive" to get money wrongfully that he may gratify certain propensities, and the man who will gratify those propensities only when he has the money in his hand. In the one case want of money urges, in the other the possession of money tempts.

The temptation is what the employers need to fix their minds upon, for they can control that. That is the chief cause of any lapses from business virtue that travellers make, and there are some men under a cloud who would never have had a stain on their name if they had not been trusted with too much. Their weakness, not their covetousness, is the mainspring of their wrong doing. Absolute confidence sometimes makes criminals. It is well to be sparing of it unless with due checks. It would be a very good rule to require every city traveller to report and account for, at the end of every day, every cent of money collected. This would relieve him of money during the hours when he is most exposed to, and most liable to succumb to, temptation—the evening hours, when amusement, fellowship, conviviality, exert their influence to relax the fibres of a man's moral nature. Money over-night is apt to be dissipated, no matter whose it is, if it is in the pockets of weaklings. The men of tried honesty, whose virtue has come out untainted from the crucible of great temptation, would just as soon not be the custodians of other people's money beyond the time actually necessary.

The retailer is protected by his receipt, no matter how the medium of conveyance to the wholesaler may miscarry. But it is annoying for him to have question made of his word when he comes to the house to square up some balance and finds himself still charged for what he no longer owed. In the present circumstances he might do that, and wrongly blame a perfectly honorable traveller. If he paid a sum of money to such a traveller it might be a matter of three or four days before it reached the house. The retailer might call in the meantime to pay some balance still due and find himself confronted by a claim for the whole. Perhaps a few hours after, his money would come in. But the confidence of retailers is likely to be shaken in any other traveller of a house which through such causes has not done prompt justice to the retailer. Also there is some damage done to his confidence in that house. All this could be prevented and the temptations to travellers to go in for a fast life would be withstood, if daily reports were adopted. A system that would probably be as practicable and would exercise a still stronger restraint upon the traveller is that of payment by check alone.

A BREAK IN STARCH.

The British American Starch Company, of Brantford, has evidently resolved upon taking an independent course in the matter of discounts. On Tuesday its advertisement appeared in the daily newspapers stating that after that date the following discounts would be granted on all its brands:

10 boxes, or their equivalent in barrels or half-barrels, trade discount of 7½ per cent. and freight prepaid to any railway station in Ontario or Quebec.

40 boxes, or their equivalent in barrels or half-barrels, trade discount of 10 per cent. and freight prepaid to any railway station in Ontario or Quebec.

Terms—30 days net.

Orders will be filled by the factory, if so desired, at these discounts, or, if preferred, through any wholesale grocer.

This makes an end of conformity with the discounts of fellow-manufacturers and evidently repeals whatever agreement was made wirh the Guild. The company aims, it is plain, to work up a direct trade with retailers, and to do so appears to be willing to divide up with them a liberal proportion of the discounts formerly allowed to wholesalers.

TORONTO RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

A considerable number of the members of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association stayed at home, as usual, on the evening of the monthly meeting of that body. It is a pity that a larger delegation cannot be got together once a month. On Monday night last members were not more punctual than numerous. There were some very late arrivals, and the meeting did not get started before 9 o'clock. President Booth is a good man in the chair. Whenever he is called upon for a ruling he is prompt and accurate. He is well versed in procedure, and there is no other member more familiar with the constitution than he is. He is not disposed to let pointless, erratic talk consume the time, but does what he can to have all discussion taper expeditiously towards a resolution. But on Monday night discussion was hard to direct, leaping from one thing to another with a waywardness that was unusual. Two or three motions would sometimes be awaiting the question at once. At stages, too, fun appeared to be preferred to business, and a good deal of time was whiled away rather divertingly. The new secretary begins like an efficient officer, and if he continues as he has set out he will soon be drawing a revenue from the membership. He brought in thirteen new names on Monday night, and as he covers the city every week he will be likely to keep on extending the membership until he has it above 90 in a very short time. It is early to congratulate the Association upon its choice, but it looks as if it were in order to do so. It is gratifying to know that the Association lost nothing on the At Home, as that eminently successful affair might easily have brought them a little to the wrong side of the ledger. The peddling by-law is again one of the uppermost matters in local trade interest. The circular questions also received some attention.

The following members were present: President Booth (in the chair), Messrs. Mills, Williamson, McCulloch, Roberts, Lindsay, White, Johnson, Clark, Gibson, Butcher, Westren, Mulqueen, Saunders, Noble, Barron.

After the minutes of last meeting were read, Mr. Gibson asked if the item relating to the Secretary's salary provided for his receiving a bonus on each member after there are 90 members in good standing; and if the calculation should include all who are now in the Association, whether any such lapse from their standing in the meantime. This led to some discussion as to when the Association year began, and was set aside for the time being.

Moved by Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Mills that the minutes be confirmed.—Carried.

TRUSTEES EX OFFICIO COMMITTEEMEN.

Mr. Roberts moved, in accordance with a notice made two months ago, that the by-laws be so amended as to make the Trustees of the Special Fund ex-officio members of the Executive Committee. Mr. Clark seconded, and the motion was carried.

NEW MEMBERS.

The following new members were proposed by Mr. Gibson, seconded by Mr. Johnson, and admitted: Messrs. Mitchell & Co., Mossman, McDonald, Harris, Allworth, Thomas, Crown, Langlois, Marmion, Muthrie, Ratcliffe, Lumsden, Childs.

THE AT HOME REPORT.

Mr. Williamson presented the report of the At Home Committee, showing a balance of $5. Upon the motion of Mr. Williamson, seconded by Mr. Clark, this report was adopted and the committee discharged.

TARES AND TOBACCO LICENSES.

Under the head of New Business, Mr. Gibson advised the members to look to their tares, especially on tea. By so doing they could save a few shillings now and then. Retailers weigh the gross and find it right, but do not weigh the tare.

Mr. Mills recalled to the minds of those present that all tobacco licenses ought to be paid now, or they will lapse if not looked after at once.

Mr. Gibson said that those licenses were imposed by Mayor Howland to give the police authority to enter tobacco and cigar stores to see that no objectionable practices were carried on in connection with them. Fifty cents would do as well as $5, the latter amount in his opinion being excessive. The fee ought to be nominal.

PEDLARS' LICENSES.

Mr. Mills drew attention to the fact that the pedlars were agitating again to have license fees reduced to $10, and that their Association had lately passed a resolution approving the abolition of Mr. Awde's office, because he was instrumental in putting on a heavier license. The pedlars were to wait on the Markets and Health Committee on Friday with their petition. Would it not be impolitic therefore to ask that the cigar licenses be repealed or lowered, and that the pedlars' be not made less? He would suggest to leave the cigar licenses alone just now.

Mr. Williamson agreed with Mr. Mills, and since the cigar licenses would hold for another year at all events, he thought they ought to be left alone and that a strong deputation should be sent before the Markets and Health Committee to oppose the pedlars. He moved that a deputation of all the members at present assembled wait on the Markets and Health Committee. Mr. Roberts seconded this.

Mr. Mulqueen felt that as the butchers suffered equally with the grocers from the incursions of the pedlars, the co-operation of the butchers should be asked.

The original motion being withdrawn, Mr. Williamson moved, seconded by Mr. Gibson, that a committee of association members from each ward wait on the local alderman who is on the Markets and Health Committee, and represent to him the views of the association on the license question. Carried.

Mr. Saunders moved that a circular be drawn up and printed, setting forth the views of the Association upon the peddling question, but this motion did not go through.

The following committees were appointed to wait upon the alderman of the ward to which each was respectively detailed:

For No. 1, Saunders and Muthrie; No. 2, McCulloch and Mulqueen; No. 3, Mills, Westren, Roberts, Johnson; No. 4, Clark and Butcher; No. 5, White and Williamson; No. 6, Booth and Gibson.

Mr. Barron having requested that his name be left out of a proposed committee for his ward, Mr. White inquired why any man should be excused from serving. It was an unpleasant job last year, and no one should shirk it this year. Mr. Williamson explained that Mr. Barron lived on a street which the by-law forbade pedlars to trade upon.

Mr. Mulqueen, seconded by Mr. McCulloch, moved that if it is found on Friday that the Markets and Health Committee are disposed to reduce the licenses, the secretary be instructed to send notices to all the grocers, fruiters and butchers to meet on Monday night to wait on Council.

Mr. Mulqueen finally withdrew this motion.

Mr. Westren moved that if this question is to come up before the Council on Monday night, the secretary be instructed to notify all the members to be on hand on Monday night 15 minutes before the meeting of the Council, and that the members notify all neighboring butchers and fruiters to come along. Mr. Mills seconded this, which was carried.

Moved by Mr. McCulloch, seconded by Mr. Gibson, that the committees which shall have waited on the members of the Markets and Health Committee, meet on Wednesday night. Carried.

ACCOUNTS.

Accounts for postage and repairs to cyclostyle $2.10. These were ordered to be paid.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The secretary reported a letter from Petrolia asking particulars to form an association. This had been answered.

An invitation was read from the secretary of the City Travellers' Association, to their At Home on Friday night, enclosing tickets for the Secretary, the President and Vice President of the grocers' Association. This was received and the secretary instructed to acknowledge the receipt of the tickets with thanks.

A letter was read from the Single Tax Association, which was laid on the the table.

THE ASSOCIATION YEAR.

Mr. Mills said that many members came in during the middle of the year, and expected their membership to go a full year. He would recommend that a year be allowed for the first term whenever begun, and that when resuming, the fee for the time elapsing between the end of this term and the beginning of the Association year be collected. This would prevent confusion and be a guide to the secretary in collecting.

Upon this matter the chairman read the rule of the constitution, which showed that the fees should be paid half-yearly in advance. This settled the matter.

THE CIRCULAR QUESTIONS.

The circular prepared by the assemblage of delegates which met here in the fall was taken up at the point where the last meeting left off, that is, at Question 4, which was :

Are wholesale houses in the habit of selling to consumers in your locality ?

Mr. Noble said he could produce a memorandum of a sale of 5 lbs. of walnuts, and 5 lbs. of almonds sold to a consumer for a party.

Mr. Gibson and Mr. Barron thought this rather vague an example to found an affirmative answer upon.

Mr. Mills suggested that the answer should be that instances of wholesalers selling to consumers are less frequent than formerly, and that cases should be reported and made the basis of protest with the wholesalers. This answer was finally adopted.

Mr. Gibson said he did not like the "all do it" charges against wholesalers. He had heard charges made against wholesalers, when the Grange Supply store was the place meant.

Mr. Barron also asked definite charges.

Question 5—Do they sell to charitable institutions, hotels or any but retailers ?

The answer was : All wholesalers in Toronto do this.

Question No. 6—What steps would you suggest to stop this practice in future ?

In answer to this, it was shown that a former appeal of the Association against the selling of wholesalers to hotels, etc., was met on the part of the wholesalers by the statement that if Toronto houses refused to sell, Montreal wholesale houses would take all this custom, including such buyers as the Queen's Hotel.

It was agreed that big institutions should be supplied by wholesalers, but that small ones should not.

The answer adopted was : By the united action of the Associations of Toronto, Montreal, Hamilton, London, etc.

No. 7—Do you know of any professedly wholesale houses who are or who have been selling to consumers ? This was answered thus : We have two charges under investigation, which are now in the hands of the Executive Committee.

Question 8—Would you, in cases where credit has been given to irresponsible traders, be in favor of withdrawing your custom from the wholesale house granting such credit ? A.—Yes.

Question 9—What are your views as to the disposal of bankrupts and bankrupt stocks ? A.—We approve of auctions.

Question 10—Are there any supply stores in your locality ; if so, by whom are they supplied ? A.—We believe there are.

As the hour was very late, the further discussion of the circular questions was postponed and the meeting adjourned.

MAPLE SUGAR.

A St. Albans, Vt., correspondent to the Boston Journal says that the Canadian maple sugar makers export a large amount of their production to the United States every year, and it is estimated that fully 2,000,000 pounds of the product of the maple orchards of the Dominion have been shipped to American markets during the past season.

For the year ending June 30, 1891, the importations of Canadian made sugar into this country were 2,273,324 pounds, valued at $104,256, which is a valuation of about 4½ cents per pound. The amount received at the port of Chicago alone that year was 450,000 pounds.

There is no duty imposed by the United States Government on imports of foreign made maple sugar, hence the sugar producers in this country are obliged to compete with cheap methods and cheap labor employed in its manufacture across the line. Much of the product of Canadian sugar bushes is made in the old fashioned way, the potash kettle not having been displaced to any great extent by the modern evaporator. Considerable sugar, however, is made in the eastern townships by the evaporator process.

It is estimated that fully 20,000,000 pounds of sugar was produced in New England in 1891, Vermont's production alone being 17,000,000 pounds. Probably the home market took one-half of this amount, leaving the balance for western and southern markets. Vermont producers have the reputation among consumers every where of making as fine a quality of sugar as is manufactured anywhere in the country, and the market for their production extends to the Pacific slope, with a constantly growing demand. The shipment of maple sugar and syrup from Vermont to the West has been less than usual the past year, and there is quite a large amount, in the aggregate, in the hands of producers and dealers in this State.

The greater portion of the importations undergoes the process of remelting and adulteration, and is then placed on the market as the genuine Vermont article. This foreign-made sugar is bought almost exclusively by Western parties. The product of Canadian maples has a stronger flavor and is darker in color than that produced from Vermont maple sap, making it better for purposes of adulteration. The low price for which this foreign sugar can be bought is another point in favor of the Canadian producer. Vermont sugar has a finer flavor, is lighter in color and finer grained than that made across the border, and it commands a higher price. Hence the foreign article finds a ready sale in the "wild and wooly" West, where it is "refined" by enterprising firms for home market. The Wester "producer" of "pure Vermont maple sugar" advertises his goods as put up by the "Belvidere Canning Company," or uses the name of some Vermont town for a trademark for his packages In order to convince the unsophisticated Westerner that the goods are genuine the dealer resorts to various subterfuges, the favorite one being to wrap up the package in back numbers of Vermont newspapers.

It is said that the proportion of maple sugar to other substances used in the remelting and "refining" process, is one pound to five—or, in other words, that five pounds of "new" sugar is made from one pound of old, the additional four pounds weight consisting of glucose and cheap grades of cane sugar. Granulated sugar is sometimes used. Thus it is made possible by this practice to produce annually from 8,000,000 to 10,000,000 pounds of bogus maple sugar and syrup from sugar bought in the Dominion. The New England farmers consequently lose the sale of this amount of sugar annually in addition to suffering a depreciation in the market value of their production.

The Vermont farmers will not compete with Western "manufacturers" in the bogus sugar business. They believe maple sap produces better maple sugar and syrup than glucose or imported sugars. They want protection, however, from the Government either by the imposition of an import duty on maple sugar or by the passage of a national law against the adulteration of the product of the maple and the sale of sugar which is adulterated.

Vermont has a stringent law against the manufacture and sale of bogus sugar, which reads as follows :—

"A person who shall adulterate maple sugar, maple syrup or bees' honey, with cane sugar, glucose, or with any substance whatever, for purpose of sale, or who knowingly sells maple sugar, maple syrup or bees' honey, that has been adulterated, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $50, nor more than $200, for each offence; and one-half of such fine, on conviction, shall go to the complainant."

There are several corporations engaged in the manufacture and wholesaling of maple sugar and syrup in this State, which guarantee the absolute purity of their goods, and have a well-established reputation for putting up sugar and syrup of superior quality.

REFORM IN TRADE METHODS.

Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

DEAR SIR,—In your fall number, which by the way was an excellent piece of typography and a good evidence of your enterprise, I endeavored to arouse some discussion on the above subject. For obvious reasons I am not fond of newspaper discussions, but I do think that the case merits some further attention than that already bestowed upon it. As this is not of the "open letter" variety of discussion, so much detested by right-minded people, may I so far intrude as to call the attention of interested parties among your readers to a point or two. This subject has been forced to my attention by a rumor which is going the rounds, to the effect that some radical change is imminent in trade circles regarding terms and discounts.

In my article on the occasion referred to, I made complaint of the iniquitous system which renders money scarce for twenty days each month, viz.: Sending out statements on the first of every month. For ten days money comes in fairly well, the other twenty days—starve. The point is just this: Could not our wholesale men send out their statements on the 1st and 15th, thus making two "firsts?" I think they could, and with profit to themselves. The way it is now, in order to work your discounts, you have to keep all invoices on the statement fyle, and pay them seriatum as it were. By the proposed new system, bills would be due, as a general thing, a day or two after statements were received, and could be easily paid. Besides, amounts being smaller, greater efforts would be put forth to square them off, thus enlarging the circle of cash buyers. Then again, is there any necessity for this division of groceries into two classes? Why not combine the two, strike an average time for all, and do away with these troublesome classes? Say you sell all groceries at 45 days, 2 per cent. off in 15 days. I am sure that would be an equitable table, and one that would be productive of much satisfaction to all concerned.

I also spoke of the necessity for city travellers having duplicate order books, and leaving a copy with every customer on an order being given. This scheme, I am sorry to say, has not been carried out by even one, so far as I know, and yet we have small houses, selling little bills of goods, following out the system, which is duly appreciated. Along comes a traveller of whom you may buy a thousand dollars worth, and if you do not write the facts down your memory and its treacherous fatality to forget is your only register of the transaction. Perhaps an odd refusal to give an order, without getting a copy of it, would be more effective. These few points, Mr. Editor, are given simply to create a discussion, and not for the sake of rushing into print.

Yours truly,

RICHARD A. DONALD.

NEWFOUNDLAND'S DUTY ON FLOUR.

Stewart Munn & Co. send the following circular to the millers of Canada:

MONTREAL, February 5th 1892.

DEAR SIRS,—The time is now approaching when Newfoundland buyers will contract for the spring delivery of large quantities of all grades of flour. Montreal being the receiving point for at least three-fourths of all the flour shipped to Newfoundland, we deem it expedient to advise all Canadian millers how matters now stand between Canada and Newfoundland.

We are exceedingly sorry to see that the difficulties between Canada and that country over the fishery question have brought about a differential tax on all Canadian flours entering Newfoundland. This tax is $1.05 per barrel, while all United States flours are admitted on the former tariff,—30 cents per barrel. This difference against us of 75 cents per barrel is simply prohibitory for the Canadian trade.

We hear of no prospective settlement of the question, and consider it of the utmost importance that pressure should be brought to bear on our Government to induce them to endeavor to arrive at some understanding with our sister Colony.

Newfoundland requires every year 300,000 to 350,000 barrels of flour, and we are certain that there will be no difficulty in Canadian millers securing the bulk of this trade, if we are placed on equal terms with our American competitors. For the first time for several years the prices of Canadian flours are on a level with, or a little below those of American millers, and it would show a lack of enterprise (which we are certain is not the case) on the part of Canadian millers, if they allow such a good opportunity to pass for disposing of part of a good harvest.

Too much time has been wasted already, and the settlement seems to be farther off than ever. It therefore seems to be imperative that, in addition to our Board of Trade, the Dominion Millers' Association should at once move energetically in the matter. It is only by prompt action that we can hope to retain even a share of a trade which is so important to the Dominion.

The matter is now before the Montreal Board of Trade, and that body will, we have no doubt, be glad to receive the co-operation of all other Trade Associations in pressing the importance of the question upon the Dominion Government.

We fully rely on your aid in this matter, and we respectfully suggest that every miller on receiving this letter will at once communicate with the representative of his district in Parliament, and also write to the Millers' Association in support of this effort, otherwise the share of Newfoundland spring orders for flour which certainly belong to Canada will go to American millers.

Among the names published in THE GROCER'S report last week of the Toronto Grocers' At Home, those of Mr. John Butcher, Mrs. Butcher, and Miss Butcher, were unfortunately omitted. The Cincinnati Grocer and Trade Index has chosen a shorter but more comprehensive name. Its ample and well-filled pages came out last week under the title "The Merchant Sentinel." Our live contemporary has parted with none of its characteristic pungency by the adoption of a new sign.

Messrs. John Davie & Co., Detroit, Mich., and Windsor, Ont., have taken off their Canadian travellers for the present. meantime helping themselves to $25 from the till. The clerk could give no clue whereby to identify the men, and up to the present nothing has been done towards their capture.

The annual meeting of the British Columbia Fruit Canning and Coffee Company, was held on the 19th Jan. The Secretary reported a successful year's business, and it was resolved to purchase some new machines for the coffee and spice business. A new blend of coffee, "The Empress," has become a general favorite, and is meeting with a good sale. The old Board of Directors were re-elected as follows: President, E. Lindsay Phillips; Secretary, Walter Taylor; Directors, E. E. Rand, H. P. McCraney, and I. Oppenheimer.

TREASURER WILLIAMSON.

With apologies for its absence from last week's sketch, we beg to present our readers in this issue with a portrait of the genial

MR A. R. WILLIAMSON.

Treasurer of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association. The photograph was not to hand in time last week for a cut to be made to illustrate the reference made to Mr. Williamson and his official colleagues.

MONTREAL CHAT.

Mr. Ranson of the firm of Messrs. Ranson & Forbes is still laid up.

Mr. H. C. Miner, of Messrs. Miner & McKechnie, Granby, Que., has been elected mayor of that place.

B. T. Bell, representing Babett's soap, was in town last week, and reports trade along the route very fair.

The Retail Grocers' Associations held a meeting the other night to distribute tickets for the annual drive and dinner to the members.

Since December the fifteenth not a single, carload of pulp could be got from the beet root sugar works, the sale of that article having been so great.

The beet root sugar factory of Farnham, which was running from Sept. 28th to Jan. 1, is now undergoing repairs. Some 14,000 to 15,000 tons of beet root had been delivered to the works in 1891, and a considerable quantity of sugar was put on sale.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Feb. 11, 1892.

GROCERIES.

All days have been about equal measures of business done since last report. Heaviness is the prevailing temperament of all lines except tea. The uncertainty which hung over the sugar market put back the demand for that commodity several days, and of course affected the demand for other goods as well. Cutting appears to have been less widespread and not to have gone so deep. Canned goods are firm. The only new goods that have got on the market since last week are prunes. Besides the unsettled sugar question, a departure by one of the manufacturers has been made from the combine discounts on starch. The reports of payments are very satisfactory, the time of year being considered. The 4th of February has not wrought such havoc among the grocery trade this year as it undoubtedly would have done if credit had been kept less well in hand by the wholesalers. A few weeks hence things cannot but be very much brighter. Stagnation may possibly prevail throughout this month, but the conditions exist for a strong revival in spring.

CANNED GOODS.

The influence of all holders is now clearly on the side of firm prices, the disposition to quote nothing inside of $1.10 being quite simultaneous. There are no bears on the street just now. The price is not easily raised to one general level of $1.10 though, and $1.05 is a quotation at which purchases can still be effected, though it is not probable that all houses would recognize any necessity in the present circumstances of the market to come to that figure. It is a forced price wherever it is recorded. Inquiries continue for round lots, no large deals are reported as the upshot of them, but traders' orders aggregate a very considerable volume. Peas are the scarcest line, tomatoes next. Assorted lots are what inquiries usually relate to. Salmon is steady from $1.40, with $1.35 now and then quoted. All other lines are normal. Vegetables on spot are plainly rather short until further supplies are sent on from canners' stores, as this week jobbers have had to help one another through with their orders.

COFFEES.

On spot, stocks of Brazil are adequate in ordinary grades for some time yet, though jobbers will have to be early buyers of finer coffees before very long, and will have to lay in general supplies at the farthest in a month or so. Prices are higher. At Santos yellow fever is causing a great contraction in the shipping, as few vessels now touch at that port, and business cannot be attended to by the exporters. This throws the demand on shipments from Rio, and strengthens the prices of Rio coffees. Here, prices run from 18c. upwards. Javas and Mochas are quiet but firm at Prices Current quotations.

The New York Commercial Bulletin says: It seems to be as difficult to get coffee into Santos as out of the port, and this steamer's mail reports that at the first of last month there were at the Mogyana station at Campinas 222 car-loads of coffee that could not be shipped to Santos for want of rolling stock on the Paulisto and English railways.

DRIED FRUIT.

New prunes are now in all hands, the shipment for general distribution having arrived. The demand shows no eagerness

yet. Sphinx U's are 7 to 7½c., C's 7½c., B's 8c., in cases. In casks the price is 5¼ to 5½c. Currants are steady from as low as 5¼c., but 5½ to 5¾c. are the ruling prices for good fruit. Samples accompanying offers from New York at 2⅞c. here, have been shown, but the quality and condition are of the poorest. It is scarcely possible that any of this low-priced trashy stock will find sale on this market. Advices from New York state that there is no good stock to be had on that market. The sag in prices here a week ago was due to lower quality fruit being on the market, not to any depression in the value of good stock, which is quite strongly held by those who have any. Valencia raisins are not cut quite so low, 5c., being the closest price the street is quoting generally. Dried fruit has had rather a small week's business. Evaporated California fruit is steady and unchanged.

NUTS.

Business is light, almost nominal. Values follow the quotations in Prices Current. The market is featureless.

RICE AND SPICES.

Rice is in the limited request that is always seasonable at this time of year. Small parcels, mostly of choice grades, are going out, but sales are rather few and far between.

In spices nothing eventful comes up for notice. A very ordinary run of demand is experienced at prices that are steady on spot, though staples are easy outside.

There appears much confidence in the ability to maintain the advanced plane of value secured on ginger during the past year. The foundation for the gain was found in limited production and unusually low rates prevailing, and as present indications point to further small crops, and accumulations down to a comparatively narrow compass, holders entertain a feeling of decided hope over the outlook.—N. Y. Bulletin.

SUGAR.

"Stale, flat and unprofitable" is the trade in sugar just now. Buyers have held off all week waiting for that drop of ¼c. in the price of granulated that Ontario Guilds had recommended as a temporary means of placing the trade in yellows upon a better footing. That change was prevented from taking effect at the time selected for it, owing to the attempt of certain wholesalers to forestall their fellows by a premature bid for orders at the low price which was expected to be authorized. A great many orders placed by retailers before the news of this proposed change got out were cancelled when the prospect of ¼c. lower price loomed up. Hence there has been a dearth of orders, which, comparing small things with great, resembles somewhat the stoppage in the sugar business which immediately preceded the change in the tariff. Prices have not thriven on the meagre trade that has been transacted. Yellows can still be bought low, though 3¼c. has not been heard of this week. The best price that receives common consent is 3.35, and that is more than ⅛c. below cost. Just now prices appear to be somewhat plastic at the refineries, as lots of 100 barrels can now be bought at as easy prices as big deals were put through at in the earlier part of the winter. The fundamental basis of prices, the value of raw, is still firm, and the low estimates of the beet crop have not been gainsaid by any fresh information. The price of granulated is 4⅞ to 5c. But there is one indication of strength in the prices of refined, refiners will sell only for prompt delivery. They are looking forward to better profits.

Willett & Gray's weekly Statistical Sugar Trades Journal says:

Raws—The tendency of the week until near its close was towards easier quotations, as shown by the sales reported. A further decline has perhaps been avoided by the unexpected change from weakness to strength shown in the European markets. Still, as this strength is partly on account of speculative purposes, it may prove not to be so permanent so early in the year. After the earlier part of the Cuba crop is marketed, an advance will have a better foundation for permanency. Holders here are encouraged by this strength abroad, but refiners do not yet show any change of purpose, and continue to talk disparagingly of prospects, no doubt influenced by the condition in which the refined market is thrown by the continued close competition between themselves. But if Europe remains strong, buyers will be disappointed, and holders need not fear any lower prices, for refiners are not as well provided with sugars as they will need to be in the immediate future, and, without fear of competition from Europe, the Cuban market will grow stronger rather than weaker. The Muscovado sugars from the British West India crop are waited for with anxiety, as such grades of sugar are now unobtainable. Our Cuba correspondents have modified their views on crop prospects somewhat, and we change our estimate from 850,000 tons to 830,000 tons, against 815,516 tons last year.

Refined—Increased meltings should indicate a better increased trade and a better demand, which is correct to some extent, and yet a surplus of manufacture is no doubt still unsold, and prices remain at the same low level as heretofore; in fact, it is reported (but lacks confirmation) that at some competing points west the Spreckels' refinery have undersold even the parity of 3.92c. net cash for granulated. The reduction in price of raw sugar might have led to a general further small reduction in granulated, but is probably avoided by the sudden change to strength in Europe. If the demand should show much increase, as is possible, advance in prices of refined may be established by overcoming the immediate causes of competition. We rather think the danger point of lower prices has been passed for this year, unless a war of "the survival of the strongest" is to occur between refiners, which we think will be avoided.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

The efforts of Canadian refiners to check business in United States syrups continue to rule in favor of the buyer. Prices are as low as 1⅞c. Offers have been received as low as 10c. per wine gallon, f. o. b. Boston. This is equivalent to about 12½c. imperial gallon. To this is to be added 4-5c. per lb. for duty, or above 10c. per gallon, a further addition of 3c. per gallon is to be made for freight. This makes the price, laid down here, about 26c. per gallon, or close to 2c. per lb.

Molasses is never a very salable line in Ontario, and a few casks go pretty far these days. New Orleans is quiet from 30 to 50c., and West Indian at about 35c. finds little sale.

TEAS.

Teas are having the good turn that always comes their way at this time of the year, and retailers are replenishing their stocks satisfactorily. There is little doubt that better value is obtainable now than will be six weeks hence. Prices have hardened perceptibly since last report. The regular trade demand has not been the only influence to contribute to this. A demand from Chicago and New York for Japans upon this market has done something to bring down stocks. Some two thousand packages of medium to finest grades have been disposed of to buyers in those markets at better prices than are going here. There is more inquiry from the same source, and it would seem to be an opportune time for retailers to provide for their wants. The views of the sellers are showing more decision and may soon be in the ascendant. Prices range from 12c. upwards for Japans, 15c. upwards for Congous, 16c upwards for Hysons.

favor with which Indian and Ceylon teas are being regarded in foreign markets is shown by the progress made in the export trade of 1891 over that of 1890. Much encouragement may be derived from the fact that a larger quantity of both Indian and Ceylon tea was exported during 1891, in spite of the high prices ruling during a considerable part of the year. MARKET NOTES.

Clemes Bros. have a very nice line of last season's maple syrups in tins. In cases of four dozen they sell at $6.

The Canada Meat Packing Co. has issued a new list of prices, but only one or two minor changes have called for and made in our Prices Current to adapt them to the new list.

Eby, Blain & Co. are putting on the market, here, Munn's Smoked Caplin in Oil, a new line put up in oval tin boxes by Stewart Munn, St. John, Newfoundland. This is a very attractive specialty, and cannot but displace goods of similar pretensions, but entirely unequal merit that have been on the market for some time. It is specially adapted to take the place of Crosse & Blackwell's kippered herring.

The manufacture of soups, catsups, etc., such goods as are turned out by the T. A. Snider Preserve Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, can be equalled only by years of study. Mr. Snider is a Canadian, born a few miles from the city of Toronto, and having lived in Canada a number of years, knows the requirements of our trade. Our representative had the pleasure of being shown through this immense establishment, some time since, by their Sec.-Treas., Mr. Jeff Livingston, who looks after the buying for the manufacture of these goods. In the busy season one could spend a few hours in watching the 700 employees that are kept busy preparing goods for market. The boxes in which the goods are packed for shipment are manufactured on the premises. The printing on the outside, which is done in two colors, is turned out by the large machine they have for this purpose. Last year Messrs. Snider's people gave away samples of their goods at the various Exhibitions throughout Canada, and will do the same this year. Since then Messrs. Wright, Copp & Co., Toronto, their Canadian agents, have succeeded in placing their goods on the shelves of nearly all the best grocers in the country. The labels, and manner in which the goods are packed attract the attention of both the seller and buyer. If you have not seen them write the Canadian agents for samples and prices.

DRUGS AND CHEMICALS.

Manufacturers of salsoda are quoting higher for spring delivery.

La grippe has befriended the mustard men this year, a very unusual demand for that article being called forth by the application in the form of plasters, of mustard to patients who are afflicted with the epidemic.

PETROLEUM.

Nothing new comes up for notice in the petroleum market, prices remaining stationary and business very quiet.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports : Petrolia crude $1.29 per bbl. ; Oil Springs crude $1.29½. We are happy to note an improvement in the price of Oil Springs crude. For some time past refiners have had no preference in the matter and the prices of Petrolia crude and that of Oil Springs has been the same. But in consequence of the production in Oil Springs having fallen off, and the production in Petrolia having slightly increased, the price of Oil Springs article has been firm during the last few weeks, and a number of the producers there refused to take less than $1.30 for their oil, and we think they will get that price too, before many days. The refined oil market is steady and low. The fight between the refiners still goes bravely on, and will no doubt result in the "Survival of the fittest."

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Tub butter is very scarce. In the first place good tub butter is never plentiful, but now it is exceptionally hard to get. In the second place inferior or medium tubs are picked up as soon as they arrive, on Montreal account. For these reasons the market is kept quite bare of all grades of tub, and the demand is sharpened in consequence. The prices holding for choice tub butter are 17 to 19c. Medium tub is worth 14 to 16c. There have been some low grades disposed of at 10c. Roll butter comes forward in its usual plenitude and mediocrity. Of the lower grade large rolls that come to hand a considerable proportion is shipped eastward. Prices are 14 to 16c. The sale of creamery at 24 to 25c., has been benefited by the lack of packages of good dairy.

Cheese is still stiff at 11 to 12c. for fall makes, with 9c. nominal for early summer descriptions.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES—A small circulation from hand to hand is continued internally, while the outward movement continues steady without any improvement in prices. Nor does any appear to be looked for at once, as holders are unloading to catch the present market for fear they may have a worse. Prices are $1.25 to $2.50. Repacking is now one of the losing factors.

The Best Grocers Make a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

MARKETS—Continued.

BEANS—The price has yielded to the unfavorable conditions that now hold. The demand is in a very relaxed state, while offerings are liberal. The price is down to $1.25 to $1.30, with large lots 10c. less.

CRANBERRIES—There is an evident excess of stock, under which prices are dwindling. Quotations are easy at $6 to $7, and business lags. At all central points there appears to be a plethora.

DRIED APPLES—Holders apparantly reason that prices have reached a point below which they cannot sink, and that any change must be for the better. Offers are therefore not free, nor for that matter are bids. The price is 4¼c. outside. There are no sales at that figure, but a few offers at 4½c. are made and generally taken. Here small lots are 4¾ to 5c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—There are inquiries but not much actual business. Small parcels continue to be obtainable outside. Anything bought here commands 8c. or there is no sale. Stocks are replenished at this figure from a portion, stored here, of the stock comprehended in the Montreal deal. Small lots are 8½ to 9c.

EGGS—Strictly fresh are hard to get. Accordng to degree of freshness the price ranges from 16 to 19c. Limed are abundant, but rather more active than they were, at 14 to 15c.

HIDES—Killing is kept up pretty actively, and stock comes in freely enough to keep prices down to their 4½c. basis for No. 1 green cows, Cured is in better request at 5c., several cars having gone out this week at that figure.

HONEY—Extracted is quiet at 8 to 10c., and sections are unchanged at 14 to 16c.

HOPS—Growers are somewhat high in their views, which makes selling laborious. The range of quality this year is wide ; this makes the range of prices broader than it commonly is. Wind-whipped, off-flavor stock goes slow at 18c., while for finest holders want 22c. The week's sales have been few and generally small.

ONIONS—Not many are handled just now on account of the delicacy of the stock in winter. The price is $1.25 to $1.50 per bag.

POULTRY—Receipts have fallen off very greatly. What comes to hand finds its way to the street market chiefly, and an unusual quantity has been confiscated this week. Turkeys are 10½ to 11c., geese 7½ to 8c., chickens 40 to 60c.

POTATOES—The sale of cars is a matter of casual occurrence, and offers are not so free, the weather increasing the risk. Cars are 35c., out of store lots are 45 to 50c.

SEEDS—Alsike is easier at $5.50 to $6. Red clover is $5 to $5 75 and tends downwards. Timothy is now coming forward at $1.25 to $1.50.

SKINS—Sheepskins are somewhat scarce at $1 to $1.25. Calfskins are quiet at 5 to 7c.

TALLOW—For refined 5½ to 6c. remain unchanged, and 2c. for rough.

WOOL—The very outside price for fleeces is 18c., and the fewer the better appears to be the motto of the buyers.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

The winter crop of hogs is undoubtedly all or nearly all marketed. Offerings are few and at high figures. The demand is capable of absorbing all that comes at $6, and $6.10 has been paid, though $6.25 is generally asked. Nor is it western stock necessarily that is under consideration at these figures. Packers have now to take what they can get, and all holders are equally high. Products appreciate with the stiffness in value of carcases.

BACON—Long clear is stronger at 7½ to 8c., with diminishing chances of getting any stock at the lower figure. Smoked backs are 10½c., bellies 9½ to 10c., rolls 8½ to 8¾c.

HAMS—The price is firmer at old quotations, 10½ to 11c.

LARD—Is unchanged at 9c. for tubs and 9¾c. for pails of Canadian pure, and 8 to 9c. for compound.

BARREL PORK—Is advancing. United States heavy mess is $13.50 to $14, and new Canadian is $15. For short cut $15.50 to $16 is the present range.

FRESH MEATS—Moderate offerings and steady prices are the rule. Beef forequarters are 4½ to 5½c., hindquarters 6½ to 7½c.; lamb is 8 to 9c., mutton 6 to 7c., veal 7½ to 8½c.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Oysters are moving freely, and prices are easy. The fish trade is fairly good, although prices in some lines have declined slightly. Sea fish are having an especially good movement and are plentiful on the market. There are numerous changes in prices since last week, and these may be seen in Prices Current.

SALT.

The car load trade has been small, one car of bbls. at $1.20, and one car of coarse sacks making up the total movements. Small quantities are moving freely at firm prices.

GREEN FRUIT.

A very good demand holds out for lemons, which go at steady prices, $4.25 to $4.75 for Messinas and $4 to $4.50 for Palermos. Florida oranges continue to come to hand wasty, and are steady at $2.75 to $3.75. Valencias are easier at $4. A very few bananas are in stock; the price is $1.25 to $1.75.

DRY GOODS.

Some dealers have been buying heavily in colored cottons, anticipating an advance which will undoubtedly take place, as nearly all the companies have entered the syndicate. The Hamilton Cotton Co. is out, but they have agreed to maintain prices and not to increase the capacity, and the consequence will be an advance in the near future of 12½ to 25 per cent. in the price of colored cottons. General trade among the wholesalers has been very good.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Feb. 11, 1892.

Business this week on the whole is a little better, several lines showing better enquiry. All lines of groceries are fairly steady ; Tea quiet ; coffee firm, especially for mild grades; dried fruit better demand and produce steady generally all round. The fourth of February, last week, was a fair criterion of remittances in the dry goods and hardware trade and the returns do not appear to have been satisfactory all round. Of course the grocery trade is not affected actually but it must of necessity show some sympathy.

SUGAR.

The sugar market has been quiet during the week. With continued firmness in raws refiners are not anxious to do business. Yel-

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

Inquiry, which it is hoped will soon bud into prosperous business, has been much more frequent during the intervening week since last report. But there have been no big sales made, so that in the matter of actual transactions we are little farther on now than we were a week ago. Prospects, however, are brighter. Feed has followed flour in a temporary retreat apparently, as prices are lower and business duller than they were a week ago.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are : Manitoba patents, $5.20 ; strong bakers', $4.85 ; Ontario patents, $4.40 ; straight roller, $4.75 ; extra, $4.10 to $4.15 : low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are : Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.25 to $5.50 ; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.80 to $4.85 ; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90 ; straight roller, $4.00 to $4.05; extra, $3.80 to $3.85; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL—In oatmeal there has been no change, $3.90 being the price of car lots, and $4.25 for smaller parcels. Cornmeal is steady at $3.80 to $4.

BUCKWHEAT FLOUR—Is quiet at $4.50 per barrel.

FEED—Bran is down somewhat, quoting now at $14 to $15. Shorts are $15 to $16. Mixed feed is unchanged at $23 to $25, cracked corn $1.25, feeding corn 53 to 55c., oats are 31½ to 32½c.

HAY—Receipts are heavy at $11.50 to $12 for No. 1 timothy, and $10 to $10.50 for No. 2.

STRAW—Wheat is $6, oat $6.50.

MONTREAL.

The business in flour is confined to a small jobbing movement at unchanged prices. The stocks in store show an increase of 1,877 barrels compared with a week ago, and a decrease of 5,581 barrels compared with a year ago. Patent spring, $5 to $5.35; Patent winter, $5 to $5.25; straight roller, $4.65 to $4.70; extra, $4 20 to $4.25; superfine, $4 to $4.10 ; city strong bakers', $5; strong bakers', $4.75 to $4.90.

OATMEAL—The demand for oatmeal continues very small at unchanged prices. The stocks in store show an increase of 408 barrels compared with a week ago, and 3,195 barrels compared with a year ago. Standard, per bag, $2.10 to $2.20; granulated, $2.10 to $2.20 ; rolled, $2 10 to $2.20.

The feed market is quiet and without change. We quote bran $16 to $17; shorts, $18 to $19; and mouillie, $25.

lows are quoted steady at 3½ to 4¼c., and granulated is unchanged at 4½c.

SYRUPS.

There is a better demand reported for Canadian syrups the movement this week being larger than for some time. The range is still 1⅝ to 2¼c. per pound. There is a fair jobbing movement in molasses at 35c. for Barbadoes. Briefly the volume of business while not large is up to the average.

TEAS.

The position of the tea market is unchanged, and there is practically nothing offering at present, except low grade Japans,the only transaction of importance since our last being a block of 600 packages, the terms being private. It is surmised, however, that the price is in the vicinity of 11c.

COFFEE.

The coffee market remains dull but steady, with some jobbing business in Rios and Jamaicas at 18 to 20c. We quote :—Rios, 15 to 20c.; Java, 26 to 30c.; Mocha, 27 to 30c.; Jamaica, 18 to 20c.; and Maracaibo, 23 to 25c.

RICE.

There is only an ordinary sort of trade doing in rice at unchanged prices. From the mills we quote :—Patna, $4.50 to $5; Japan, $4.75 to $5.00; standard, $3.90, and off grades, $3.50, all in car lots.

DRIED FRUIT.

Dried fruits have shown a better feeling during the week, and the market as a whole is steadier. There are still offerings of low grade Valencia raisins at very inside figures, but prime fruit holds its own around 5c. and we quote a range of 4¾ to 5c. Currants have a firmer tendency and some fair lots have been turned over during the week at 5 to 5¼c. Bosnias are the only prunes offering, and we note some fresh arrivals during the week on which holders are asking a fractional advance, and we therefore quote 5½ to 6c. Figs rule at 10c. and dates at 5c. We quote prime Valencias 5c.; currants at 5 to 5¼c. for Patras, and 6 to 7c. for Vostizzas in cases; Bosnia prunes, 5½ to6c.; figs, 10c.; and dates 5c. per lb.

NUTS.

There is little or no change in nuts since our last, under a small hand to mouth movement, the only alteration being in Grenoble walnuts which are lower at 12 to 12½c. We quote:—Almonds Tarragona 14 to 15c.; Almonds, Ivica 14 to 15c.; Almonds, common 10 to 11c.; Almonds, hardshell 07 to 08c.; Walnuts, Grenoble, new 12 to 12½c.; Walnuts, French 10 to 10½c.; Cocoanuts per 100 $4.50 to $5 ; Filberts 9 to 10c.; Pecans 16 to 17c.; Peanuts 07 to 10c.

CANNED GOODS.

There is not a large business doing in canned goods, but jobbers are apparently well satisfied with the manner in which orders are coming in. The principal call is on vegetables, peas, tomatoes and corn, moving out fairly well in ten and twenty case lots at steady prices. The only notable change in the market is the decline in the price of canned corned beef, in consequence of the by-cut in the packers quotations. On the whole the market is in a satisfactory condition, stocks are not large and all lines are expected to prove good property before the spring.

GREEN FRUIT.

This market presents its ordinary jobbing aspect. Valencia oranges move at $3.50 to $3.75, and $4 to $4.25 according to grade, while Floridas are steady and prices are somewhat higher this week at $2.75 to $3.25. Bitter oranges are a new offering, the bases being $3.50 to $4.00. Lemons are unchanged at $3 to $3.25.

APPLES.

There is the ordinary jobbing movement in apples to report with prices unchanged. For jobbing business values are $2.50 to $3. Evaporated fruit are firmly held at 8 to 9c., and dried stock is dull at 5 to 6c.

FISH.

There is practically no Lent this season, and the fish trade is suffering in consequence. Aside from some trade in frozen trout and whitefish at 4½ and 6¼c. there is little business doing.

HOPS.

Brewers are not operating at all so that business in bulk hops is practically nil and values nominal on the basis of 18 to 25c. Pressed stock furnish occassional business at 15c.

PROVISIONS.

There is no material change in provisions from a week ago. Supplies of pork continue light and this induces a very firm feeling the most recent result of which is an advance in Canada short cut of 25c. per brl. Canadian short cut, per brl. $15.75 to $16.25 mess pork, western, per brl. $15.00 to $15.50 short cut, western, per brl. $16 to 16c.50; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c ; bacon per lb. 9c. to 10c ; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¼ to 8c.

CHEESE.

It is a purely nominal market for cheese. Stocks are reduced to extremely small dimensions and holders are very independant. We quote 11½ to 12c the outside figure for fancy fall, which is hard to get.

BUTTER.

The butter market is quiet in a jobbing way, and there is no change to mention. Finest creamery 24 to 24½c.; finest Townships 18 to 20c.; Morrisburg and Brockville 18 to 19c.; finest Western 16½ to 17½c.

EGGS.

The American egg market is firm and the fact is having a sympathetic effect upon our own market here. Stocks here are larger than the average, so that we are likely to witness a considerable reduction in our importations from the Southern States as compared with former seasons, owing to this fact. With regard to exportation to England the returns since the close of navigation have not been satisfactory and shippers have come to the conclusion that only strictly new laid stock will make money on the English market. One dealer who shipped and sold in the Liverpool market a few weeks ago some 180,000 dozens has decided to retire from the business. He has sold over two car loads in Montreal which were intended for shipment at considerably below cost, and cannot find a purchaser for two cars more which he has at present in this city. Limed are selling at 15 to 16c. and held stock at 10 to 12c.

GRAIN.

The grain market is dull and uninteresting, with no business of importance doing. The stocks in store show an increase of 123,990 bushels wheat, 141,600 bushels peas, 19,183 bushels oats, 8,226 barley and 1,165 rye, compared with a week ago ; and an increase of 236,707 bushels wheat, 329.395 bushels peas, 11,897 bushels barley, 15,046 bushels rye and a decrease of 11,550 corn, and 39,-500 oats compared with a year ago. We quote: No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04; peas, 73 to 74c. per 66 pounds; oats, 32c. to 34c. per 34 pounds ; corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 45 to 46c.; good maltingdo., 60 to 63c.

NEW GOODS.

R. C. Eldridge, representing the Supply Co., of Niagara Falls, Ont., is showing a few specialties entirely new. We note a key chain in aluminum and also in links of various metals intermixed—oreide, brass, nickel silver, etc.—and having an ingenious puzzle snap. Also, a dog collar having the same curious intermixture of bright metals, which gives a very pleasing effect. Mr. Eldridge is Canadian agent for the Kelly & Woolworth harness hardware, of which a very handsome newly patented safety check hook seems about perfect. The check rein can be instantly detached by the hand, but cannot possibly be released by the horse. It is a fit ornament for the finest harness. Then he has a class of harness hardware entirely new to the trade, both in material and manner of making. It is made of the best rolled sheet metals—steel, brass, and nickel silver The parts are first cut out in powerful presses, then shaped in dies under drop presses of enormous weight. It is much stronger than the ordinary ware and takes a fine polish. It is put up in all finishes.

John Rongeau, Otterburn, Que., general merchant, has assigned.

Honore Thibaudeau, general merchant, Stratford, Que., has assigned.

A demand of assignment has been made on the Moffatt Packing Co., of Montreal.

Z. Beauregard, general merchant, St. Guillaume D'Upton, Que., is offering to compromise.

James Milne & Co., grocers and general dealers, of Bolingbroke, Ont., have assigned to Henry Barber & Co., the Front street accountants. No statement has yet been prepared, but it is estimated that the liabilities will probably reach $7,000, with assets nominally in excess of that sum. The largest creditors are in Montreal. The business was sold out some time ago, and complications have since arisen that have rendered an assignment necessary, but an offer of composition will probably be made.

At a meeting of the creditors of the Joseph Lowrie estate at Sarnia a statement of the present condition of the estate was submitted by the trustees. An interim dividend of 25c. on the dollar was declared, and a resolution passed by the meeting approving of the course taken by the trustees, and further empowering them to continue the winding-up of the business, also to deal with the real estate.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2 00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The arguments which the Patrons bring forward as the reasons for their existence and propagation are nothing less than an arraignment of the business management of the farmers. The farmers are asked to contemplate the effects of their own shortcomings as business men, and find in these the motives which should urge them to embrace the Patron cause. Their attention is drawn to their relation to the retail trade of the country, and because that is not satisfactory, they are pressed to become members of the all-reforming order. And it is with the class whose worth these arguments most strongly impugn that the persuasions of the organizers will be strongest. The business man on the farm, as the business man anywhere else, will manage to look after himself in his dealings with the retail trade. He will not, through his own improvidence, neglect, laziness or other cause, allow himself to get so far behind in his business with the retailer as to force the latter to any disagreeable resort to recover his money. The county court has no terrors for the thrifty man, and the retail trader is not obnoxious to such a man. Enlightened, prosperous farmers have nothing in common with the men who are attracted by the Patrons' representations. The people who are always in debt to the storekeepers of the country are the ones who deem themselves down-trodden. The condition of always owing they look upon as a curse, and blame the retailer for it. After they get credit they no longer consider it a great favor, for which their own business incompetence made them the suppliants.

Instead of going in a business-like way to a bank and borrowing a hundred dollars at 7 or 8 per cent. per annum, a farmer will commonly wait till he gets near the very brink of need for the money, and then will hasten to some money-shark and borrow $85 to put him through the special emergency, binding himself to pay $100 in a very short time. This is typical of a very common course of procedure on the part of struggling farmers, whose limited capacity for business is the main reason why they are always struggling. An instance was brought under our notice a short time ago which illustrates this characteristic of the poorer class of farmers. A young farmer who owed several hundred dollars of store accounts that had been accumulating for some years, was suddenly convinced of the great economy of the Patron scheme. He determined to go in for the benefits of cash trade. To wipe off the indebtedness that stood against him he conceived the idea of putting his stock and implements under a chattel mortgage at 8 per cent. He thus started in with a clean slate, reasoning that the margin saved through dealing with a Patron merchant would pay the interest on the mortgage. But he lacked the money to do a regular cash business, and had to drop back into the higher prices and credit system that he hoped to escape by alliance with the Patrons. Self-help is the thing usually lacking in the people who become Patrons.

There is a great deal of difference between this voluntary adoption by consumers of a cash basis of trade, and the enforced adoption of such a basis. If the retailers should abandon the credit system there would then be a real trial made of the endurance of people who want now to starve the retailers out of existence. The starving would be likely to be the other way. There are people whom the credit system has built up, whom a cash system would rapidly pull down. Credit has been a great economic factor in the welfare of the people of this country, and the retail traders of the country have been the dispensers of it. Hard times, bad harvests, affliction, inadequate capital, have thousands of times been withstood only because the retail merchant stood the friend of the struggler who had to face these difficulties. Many of the Patrons of to-day owe all they have to retail merchants who forbore at critical times to urge their claims for money due.

* * *

In the weekly charge sheets issued by Bradstreet's, runs the serial story of chattel mortgages given and renewed by people who have to draw upon capital to keep themselves going. Among these are noticeable every week the names of a goodly number of farmers, some on rented some on freehold property. The chattel mortgage is only a symptom of a general condition, whose other signs are to be observed in the management and business of the farmer who gives it. Such a man is usually a long way behind in his store accounts, he owes for his implements, his farm is badly cultivated, his stock poorly housed or fed. The Patron movement is eagerly embraced by such men, as it appeals to the unthrifty class. The thrifty man does not wish to be levelled down to such a standard, and will as a rule trust to his own business capacity to see him through his dealings with other people.

THE SUGAR AGREEMENT SUSPENDED.

The wholesale grocery trade of Ontario has finally cut the painter which held nearly all its members to the sugar combine. The sugar agreement is cancelled for the time being, at all events, and within the limits of this province. The local Guilds of the province of Quebec, however, remain parties to it. The influences which led to this step being taken have been noted from time to time in THE GROCER. Outside the Guild, throughout the whole period of its existence, were wholesalers who sold by direct quotation at lower prices than the agreement would allow its adherents to sell at; inside the Guild, especially since the beginning of 1891, there has been a systematic course of evasion resorted to to nullify the restrictions imposed by that agreement. A rebate in the form of a sacrifice on yellow was the most familiar device for overcoming the difficulty, and yellows came to be very generally sold at a loss. The price of granulated was nominally intact, though it was by adjusting the gain on that to the loss on yellow that equilibrium was preserved. One very guileful way of cutting prices on granulated was that of making a losing bet of $5. Travellers have been known to make this bet with a retailer, that he dare not buy 15 barrels of granulated. Of course the retailer would either not bet or else he would buy and win, thus getting 15 barrels at $5 less than the cost at the list price. In one form or another violations have been common for a long time back. All efforts to correct them proving unavailing, the list was finally aban doned.

Granulated sugar is now sold at 4½c. by Toronto wholesalers, and can be had from some of them at 4 7-16c. In New York it is 4⅜c., or just 5-16c. lower. A year ago granulated sugar was 6⅞ to 7c. on this market, and as small lots can now be bought on as easy terms as 15-barrel lots, the comparison between the price of a single barrel in Toronto now and the price a year ago stands thus : as 4 3 16c is to 7c.; that is, granulated is now more than 2½c. lower than it was a year ago. And the raw market is stiffer now than it was a year ago. The removal of the duty and the abandonment of the list have fretted away the difference. The effect must be to throw increased consumption upon granulated. What would further tend towards the same effect is the advance in the price of yellow, which was quite generally sold below cost to induce business in granulated. The free price of granulated can now be depended upon to do that sufficiently, and more money will have to be paid by retailers for yellow. Already the lowest price very commonly quoted is 3⅝c. With granulated down ½c. and yellow up ⅛c., or ¼c. in many cases, the prices of the two descriptions come about ¼c. more closely to each other than they were before. With this approximation in price, the difference in value in favor of granulated is greatly increased. In the country, however, yellow will no doubt remain in stronger demand than granulated, as there is a senseless idea that it has more strength. Heretofore the yellow sold to the country trade was about three times as much as the granulated sold to the same trade. In this city about 60 per cent. of the consumption of sugar went to granulated. It was the extent of the volume of yellow taken by the country trade that made the cutting upon it so serious a matter. If granulated had been the free-priced sugar and yellow the listed sugar, the agreement might probably have held out longer.

It is reported that the Hamilton wholesale grocers are talking of forming a combine of their own upon sugar, and that they are considering a scheme that shall include both granulated and yellow. Their division of the Cuild is said to have been less disposed to drop the list than were Kingston and Toronto.

There is no saying how long the present arrangement will hold. It cannot but be hardest upon those who made cutting a specialty. The chance is it will last, for once the wholesale traders get apart it will be hard to bring them together again. They will probably be as ready to continue to sell granulated at cost as to resume business in yellow at cost, though the quantity of granulated sold will no doubt be greater than it was before.

THE RETAILER'S MARGIN IN LIMITED PRICES.

Manufacturers who, owing to monopoly or combined arrangement, are able to dictate prices to the trade, ought to consider the interests of retailers, which they will usually find are closely identical with their own. They sometimes hit upon prices that they would reject if they perceived that such quotations provoked to, rather than restrained from, cutting. And anything that tempts the retailer to cut prices works against the efforts of manufacturers to limit prices. That ought to be thought of, and the motives of self-interest ought to be appealed to to enlist the retail trade as much as possible in the support of a uniform price. It makes it all the more difficult for manufacturers to maintain the parity of prices among themselves if they have constantly to resist the mining of those prices by cutting from below. The retail trade ought to be considered and frequently consulted, therefore, before steps are taken to prescribe or alter any price.

In certain figures there appears a fatal attraction which overcomes quotations that are very close to them. Prices will stop at these figures, or even sag back to them when they ought to be stiffly stayed on the upper side of them. Take 5c. for example. Any goods that are intended to be sold at 5⅛c., or even 5¼c., will be very commonly sold at 5c. The history of the trade in granulated sugar shows this to be the case. When it cost the grocer 4⅞c. at the point of shipment, it was sold very generally at 5c. per lb. Even when it cost 5c., exclusive of freight and cartage, there were not wanting dealers who retailed it at 5c. There are many articles brought too close to the line of danger by the price the manufacturers set on them. Starch, for instance, at 4⅞c. is sure to be sold at 5c. Anything that divides by 5 is an ugly quantity to get very close to and pass. After 4½c. is reached no jump should be taken on the under side of 5c. The next should be 5¼c. If the margin appears too great to be equitable, average up the price by limitations or extensions upon the time it is to stand. After 5¼c. has held for a sufficiently long time to realize as much profit as would be made on a 5c. profit, go back to a 4½c. basis. Or since it is hard to foresee a change in the cost of production, do not move up prices at once when a fundamental cause of advance begins to tell upon cost. Let the low prices last a little longer to offset the big stride that is to be made when the advance does come.

THE CUT IN STARCH.

The withdrawal of the British America Starch Company from the agreement made with the other manufacturers and the Guild was not followed by any marked demoralization in prices. In fact, the other two concerns—the St. Lawrence Company and the Edwardsburg Company—showed patience and discipline that are seldom exhibited in similar circumstances, the usual accompaniment of a break on the part of any party to a combine being a general collapse in prices. It has not been so in this case, the British America Company being allowed to proceed as it listed until a meeting of the Guild was held on Monday. The issue of that was an arrangement which enabled the wholesale grocery trade to sell at prices that allowed of their competing with those of the British American Starch Co. The reduction to the retail trade on prices of the starches of those two companies lower the values on their former lists ½c. per lb. on all grades as noted below. We understand this arrangment has been arrived at by the factories and wholesale trade, both contributing to the reduction, the former in prices and the latter out of the discount which formerly they had for distributing the goods.

PLEASURE BEFORE BUSINESS.

Care sat lightly upon the brows of the gay company which disported itself on Friday night in Harry Webb's parlors. There the flower of Toronto's commercial chivalry, her doughty knights of the grip—not the epidemic kind—ungirt themselves to enjoy for a brief while the soft luxury of social intercourse. It was a plain thing from the outset that they were going to succeed. The auspices of the Toronto Commercial Travellers' Association never go with anything that fails, and the occasion was the Toronto Commercial Travellers' Association's first At Home. That's what. They had made due arrangements for a good time, and there was no probability that they would have a dull one. And they hadn't. The verdict of all hands at the close was, that the evening was one of the pleasantest they had ever put in. The same boys have often temporarily crippled themselves in the pursuit of business, but were never before so footsore with ball-room exercise as they were on that memorable night.

It was enough to make the bosoms of the hosts heave with pride to behold the galaxy of beauty that the magic of their invitaiton could muster in the concert hall and the assembly room. For there were winsome and beautifully dressed women galore, the wives, the daughters, the sisters and the fiancees of the bold fellows who had got up this At Home. In their bright society it was an easy matter to drift to "the concord of sweet sound" into the rhythmic, happy movement of waltz or polka. Glionna's "nodding minstrelsy" poured out the melody in due measure, and lightened the specific gravity of every heel in the room. The enjoyment was full. The friends who were present—and these included many of the retail grocers of the city—were loud in their praises of the affair, which proceeded from beginning to end without a hitch.

The first two hours were whiled away by a concert. The pieces selected were good and they were finely rendered, some of the cleverest vocalists in the city being on the programme. The ball began at about 11 o'clock. The dances ran according to the following programme :

MONTREAL RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION ON RUNNERS.

The Montreal Retail Grocers' Association and their friends enjoyed their annual drive on Wednesday, 10th inst. At one o'clock the sleighs began to assemble in front of the Windsor Hotel, where Mr. Duckworth, city traveller for Caverhill, Rose, Hughes & Co., acted as whipper-in, and at two forty-five gave the word to start. Headed by a four-in-hand, in which were President Demers, Treasurer Scanlan, and Alderman Gauthier, honorary secretary of the Association, the Executive Committee followed in rig number two. Then came the representatives of the press and some eighty of the prettiest turnouts that Montreal could produce. The route lay through the principal streets, where the party drove for an hour, then proceeded to Sault Au Recollet, where mine host Peloquin had prepared an interesting repast for the jolly grocers. After doing justice to the same, the following toasts were drunk and responded to as below :

The Queen.
The Wholesale Grocery Trade.
The Wholesale City Salesmen.
The Retail Grocery Trade.
The Press.
The Ladies.

The president proposed the toast of the Queen, every one joining in the National Anthem.

Mr. Lightbound, of Lightbound, Ralston & Co., in responding to the toast to "The Wholesale Grocery Trade," said he regretted he was unable to reply in both languages, but hoped the members would give him credit for a friendly feeling just the same. He thought these entertainments were in line for bringing each merchant on more friendly terms with each other. He also thought the wholesale and retail trades acted too independently of each other. He would like to see closer relations.

Mr. Chas. Langlois also replied to that toast in an able manner. He represents one of the principal produce businesses of Montreal.

Mr. Robertson, (vice-president), proposed the health of the city salesmen, which was responded to by Mr. H. Childs, of Geo. Childs & Co.; Mr. D. La Pointe, of Chaput, Fils & Cie.; Mr. E. D. Cardinal, of Hudon, Hebert & Cie.; Mr. C. N. D. Osgood, of Lightbound, Ralston & Co.; Wm. Duckworth, of Caverhill, Rose, Hughes & Co., and J. M. Wilson, of Geo. Goulet's.

"The Retail Grocery Trade" brought Alderman Gauthier to his feet. He had been in the grocery business 24 years, and could see the benefit of the Grocers' Association.

John Robertson also responded. He had been in business 34 years and has yet much to learn. He was a strong supporter of the Association.

Mr. S. I. Valliers also interested the members, giving some good hints as to how a retail trade should be conducted.

Mr. L. Gouin, who by the way is a son-in-law of Ex-Premier Mercier, and Mr. A. Aumond, congratulated the committee on the success of the drive.

"The Press" was responded to by Mr. W. D. McBride, of the Gazette, Mr. D. Ayton, of the Star, and Mr. G. Hector Clemes, of THE CANADIAN GROCER.

Mr. A. Labrecque answered for "The Ladies" in an interesting speech.

Among those present were : S. Demers, president, John Robertson, vice-president, John Scanlan, treasurer, Ald. T. Gauthier, honorary secretary, James O'Shaughnessy, J. O. Leveques, Geo. Lightbound, of Lightbound Ralston & Co., H. M. Childs, traveller for Geo. Childs & Co., A. W. Osgood, traveller for Lightbound Ralston & Co., Wm. The party broke up about, 10 p.m. all saying that it was one of the best afternoon and evenings, that they had enjoyed for many a long day. The drive can well be called a grand success and away ahead of last year's.

COLLINGWOOD WANTS A FLOUR MILL AND CANNING FACTORY.

At the annual meeting of the Collingwood Board of Trade, the following matters, among others, were touched on in the address of President Long :

The Board called the attention of the Town Council to the desirability and importance of encouraging the erection here of a flour mill, but there has not been anything done in relation to this very important matter. The town is constantly losing business because it has not a flour mill. In 1890 this Board formulated a scheme and submitted it to the Council for the erection of a mill suitable to the requirements. Had that scheme been adopted the mill would now have been in operation, and attracting much of the wheat to our market which is now marketed elsewhere. It is very unbecoming, and detract, very much from the commercial importance of this town, to be without a flour mill, and I hope this Board will renew its efforts this year to have a mill built.

With a view to encourage the establishment of a canning factory here, the board endeavored through the secretary to obtain statistics regarding the canning industry from the Bureau of Industries, but was unable to do so, and the matter is at present in abeyance.

The matter of a fish hatchery is now being taken up vigorously, and, in conjunction with the Fishermen's Association, full data are being gathered. The establishment of a hatchery on Georgian bay seems absolutely necessary in order to perpetuate our fisheries, which have been affording a means of living to a considerable number of the population of several towns, both on lake Huron and Georgian bay.

The following officers were elected : President, John J. Long ; Vice-president, H. Y. Telfer ; Treasurer, E. R. Carpenter ; Secretary, G. E. Moberly ; Council, James Brydon, W. A. Copeland, C. Stephens, W. J. Frame, D. G. Cooper, G. Moberly, Charles Cameron.

HEAVY TRANSACTIONS IN RAW SUGAR.

Some heavy transactions have of late taken place in raw sugar for account of Montreal refiners, the total value of which is estimated at within the vicinity of $2,000,000. The purchases consist of East India, Java, Brazil and beet produce, part of which has been bought in the English market and part direct from points of production. Considerable beet and Java sugars have been contracted for, as well as Cuba centrifugals, which latter are largely used in the manufacture of granulated, but comparatively little Brazil, owing to the short crop of the latter and the fact that the Brazilians now refine much of their raw product, leaving them comparatively little to export.

The trade here anticipate a largely increased consumptive demand during the coming season, owing to the low price of the refined article, and consequently a heavy importation of raw, both beet and cane, may be looked for. There appears to be a complete absence of speculation in this market, although a fair movement is in progress, sufficient to supply legitimate requirements ; but beyond this dealers do not feel inclined to go at present.—Montreal Trade Bulletin.

CALLING FOR ORDERS.

TORONTO, Ont., Feb. 18, 1892.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—In the matter of "Calling upon householders for orders," I will state frankly that while I adopt the system from force of circumstances I am opposed to it. The root of the evil, however, is with the wholesale grocers.

Every firm in that line now has from two to three city travellers. These have to obtain trade in some way, and the consequence is that we have four times the number of retail grocers that we would have had we no city travellers.

So much competition therefore exists, that it seems almost imperative for a retail grocer to send a clerk to a large number of his customers weekly for orders. It is a great pity that in Toronto either wholesale or retail grocers have to send out salesmen, for it means an expense of from 8 to 10 per cent. It costs the wholesalers from 3 to 4 per cent. to sell their goods, and the retailers from 5 to 6 per cent. That of course does not include bad debts, and I think I am within the mark in stating that 70 per cent. of the bad debts comes from the calling for orders in both sections of the trade. Large numbers of families purchase goods that they do not require, and cannot afford, so as to give the clerk a respectable order. The same applies exactly to a large number of retail grocers, with the wholesale travellers.

There are some exceptional cases where a retailer can do a successful business in this city without sending for orders, but they are very rare. Some of those do a large farmers' trade, and a few others are in a locality that is densely populated with working people.

But as stated above, so long as the wholesalers keep flooding the city with retail stores in their anxiety to do business, I am afraid that retailers will be compelled to send for orders regardless of expense.

Yours truly,

WM. MARA.

Editor CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—The question that is being taken up in THE GROCER at the present time, "Should grocers solicit orders?" is one that will be apt to bring forth a great deal of discussion on both sides. For my part, I have always been more or less prejudiced against it. I consider it demeans a grocer, and it places him in the position of a pedlar to a great extent. I believe it encourages extravagance, waste, and greater debts. Housekeepers are just as liable to over-buy as storekeepers are if goods are forced upon them. Some dealers seem to have no other end in view than the almighty dollar, and use every means in their power to secure it; some use the church (or abuse it rather) and societies, begging the members to deal with them. I know of a case where a certain grocer in this city was threatened with legal proceedings if he persisted in calling at a certain house for orders, but he still continued to call. The business would be better without such men. But the custom of calling on householders for their orders is becoming more general year by year in every branch of trade. In cities, the need of it is greater than in smaller places, as in the former a grocer's customers are moving sometimes great distances from place to place, making it inconvenient to call at the store, though the customer may wish to continue dealing with the same grocer. In these cases it becomes a necessity to call for orders, and as "necessity knows no law," we are compelled to do that from which we derive the greatest good.

One great advantage a grocer would have by calling for orders, would be that it is a means of holding his trade, should a clerk of his start in opposition to him. The more I think the matter over, I feel convinced that at the present time it is to the grocer's interest to call on customers for their orders. But I hope that in the future some better way to do business will be introduced.

Yours truly,

D. W. CLARK.

THE PATRONS AND CASH TRADE.

CAMILLA, Feb. 13, 1892.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER:

DEAR SIR,—I am very glad to see the interesting articles you write in regard to the Patrons of Industry. When I read them to some of the Patrons it makes them feel very down-hearted. They have organized a lodge here and two more within four miles of here, but are not making much progress. A committee was appointed and sent to Shelburne, about ten miles north of here. That town has a population of about two thousand, but the Patrons failed to secure a man in the town to make arrangements to sell to them. I understand they are now about to try Orangeville.

When the farmers feel so rich now and conceited, they can pay cash. Do you not think it would be a good time for all retailers to join together and establish a cash system and give no credit to any person? You should urge them to do so. Let them do it on the system they work on in the States. Any farmer who is not able to pay cash goes to the bank and borrows his money. I think the retailers never had a better chance to make a move in establishing a cash system than they have at the present time.

Wishing you success, I remain

Yours respectfully, E. J. COBEAN.

[Mr. Cobean hits the nail on the head when he says that farmers and other consumers should go to the bank for money wherewith to buy, when they have not the money to pay cash to the trader. As things have gone on for years, some of the main functions of the banking system of the country have been carried on by the retail trade, who have done the work moreover without making any money out of it. They cannot be both bankers and traders without loss to themselves, and if only there were no credit but what banks recognise, there would undoubtedly be more thrift among the general body of consumers and at the same time more prosperity among traders. But bankers have not the same collateral motive for extending credit liberally that the trader has, namely, for the sake of selling goods. Hence there will always be traders ready to accept accounts that bankers reject. But in the departure that many of the leading banks have made, by opening a savings department, there is the foundation of a system such as our correspondent approves.—EDITOR.]

HOW THE CHINESE BREW THE CELESTIAL BEVERAGE.

This should be the perfect way, becuse it is the way the Chinese themselves brew their celestial beverage; Take a level teaspoonful of tea for each cup. Have a teakettle filled with the same number of cups of boiling water. Pour all the water into the teapot in which the tea is to be brewed, and which has been previously warmed gently, so that the temperature of the boiling water shall not be lowered when it is poured into the teapot.

Now stir down into the boiling water all the tea. When it is thoroughly mixed with the water let the infusion stand for four minutes, then pour it. This process reverses the one customary with us, which is to pour the water on the tea.

No person who is educated in tea drinking enough to want his tea made in this way is going to put any kind of seasoning in his cup, not even lemon.

"Won't you try a little lemon in your tea, just for once?" pleaded the young hostess to the traveller who taught her to brew her tea in the perfect way.

"Madame," he answered, with as much indignation in his tone as his gentle courtesy would permit, "my tea drinking is a rite, not an experiment."—The American Grocer.

SYSTEM.

In a conversation the other day with one of the best posted men in the grocery business in this city, the rapid growth of one of the leading houses in the trade was discussed, and the statement was made and agreed to by all of those present that the house in question owed its present enviable position to the excellent system employed in the conduct of its business. The experienced person above referred to in warmly endorsing this view, remarked that no house in the trade had so good a system, and that so long as it was adhered to it would be almost impossible for the firm to meet with disaster. However this may be, there can be no question as to the value of system in business, and although its importance increases with the volume of business of a firm, it is almost as essential to the small as to the large firm. Take the case of any retail merchant of small means, whose trade annually does not exceed $20,000. The inevitable errors due to absence of system may cause a loss of several hundred dollars a year, whereas in a much larger business the same defect may entail the sacrifice of thousands. Yet in the former instance the consequences might be as serious, if not more so, than in the latter case, owing to the limited resources of the small dealer. It is not too much to say that the neglect to establish a proper system in business has done more to paralyze the efforts of enterprising, energetic retailers in this country than any other single circumstance. It is the unsystematic merchant who suffers from the depredations of dead beats and who complains the loudest of slow-paying customers. Under a proper system the credit-dealing merchant may be as safe as those who adhere to the hard and fast rule of strictly cash sales, because a limit will be set to the time that an account shall run, and when that limit is reached no further sales are made until the customer settles. A system of collecting bills either weekly or fortnightly, and which also involves an investigation of the reputation of the applicant for credit, leaves little room for losses by bad debts, which are, however, the bane of the unsystematic dealer, who throws good money after bad by letting an account run on for weeks, and still furnishing supplies, in the hope that a settlement finally will be reached. The leaks by which profits flow away are innumerable in the business run without system. In regard to the condition of the stock and its need of replenishment, the merits of system are obvious, as it calls for the examination of stock at regular intervals and the purchase of new goods with the same uniformity. The store with a proper system becomes a convenience to the neighborhood, owing to the circumstance that consumers can reply upon getting what they order if it had previously been kept in stock, while in the prompt delivery of goods it presents so glaring a contrast to the hap hazard and unsystematic manner in which some stores are run, that the relative cost of the goods actually becomes a secondary consideration with the majority of consumers in the vicinity. There are, however, systems and systems. There is the system with which the business is carried on like clockwork and which gives satisfaction to patrons and employes, while enabling the proprietor to steadily enlarge his profits. There is also the system that is continually breaking down at critical times, and which is irksome and oppressive to the clerks and irritating to the customers because of its obvious defects. It behooves every dealer to take pains to construct a system that will possess none of these defects and that will be suited to the special requirements of his business.—Merchants' Review.

TRAVELLER'S REQUIREMENTS.

From a report upon Commercial Travellers, brought in by a special committee of the New England Druggists' Exchange, the following passages are taken : Instead of allowing salesmen to make their own prices, we should on a great many articles make a price below which they cannot go. As it is, we send out our men and we all give the same instructions, namely : " If any house names a lower price, meet it." What is the result ? A continuous whittling down of a fair profit to simply a small commission.

The time has been when a bill was paid in full as rendered, and not as now, marked with items for deduction from one cent to ten cents, because we have charged a trifle more than a price which had at some time been made by a foolish and inexperienced traveller. The sharp buyer takes advantage of all the drummers, and the more drummers there are on the road the cheaper he buys his goods.

The alienation of our customers is one of the direful effects of this custom, and it has reached this condition that the jobber is like the fifth wheel of a coach—to be used only when actually necessary. Thus the salesman on the road becomes the principal, and is so regarded by the country dealer. And is it any wonder ? He is the party with whom he deals, from whom he gets his favors, with whom he settles his accounts—often on his own terms ; for as a rule, the salesman will make allowances and credits which would not for a moment be considered by the house, were they submitted to it, simply because he is afraid if he did not meet his customer's demands a portion of his trade would go to a competitor whom he fears is already gaining the dealer's good graces and acquaintance.

The matter of credit is also an important factor to be considered. I have always held that by seeing a customer in his store once a week, and observing his habits and methods of doing business, that I was more competent to judge of his character and responsibility than a mercantile agency. But the average traveller does not stop to consider the chances of getting his pay for the goods he is selling ; but rather to sell goods and leave the matter of collection to the house. In this way, many more losses occur by bad debts than would be the case if druggists were left to order when in need, as they would then be likely to order only what they could pay for. A great many failures have occurred from over-stocking, the result of a visit from some smart drummer.

The best result can be obtained by educating men in our own offices, if possible, from boys up through the various positions of entry clerk, and so on, as they thus become familiar with our own business methods and acquire familiarity with ways of handling questions that may arise, peculiarly fitting them to take our own places in selling goods.

Employ no one who does not in character represent fully the employer, as a house is always judged by the men it sends on the road to represent them. See to it that your salesmen thoroughly understand the goods which they handle, and are familiar with their qualities. The better a man understands his business, the better salesman he becomes, and consequently the more valuable to you.

How many of you know the relation of your salesmen's profits to his salary and expenses ? If you do not know it the sooner you ascertain, the better will it be for your business, and the quicker can we arrive at some plan of selling goods on the road on a better and more uniform foundation.

Insist on an itemized statement of every cent allowed on each account, and on what articles the allowance was made. These can be laid one side, and the traveler reprimanded, if necessary, on his return. If this plan is well carried out, you will soon find your salesmen more careful in making allowances, and will effectually put a stop to his making deductions for freight and allowances for articles which are sold at an agreed price.

Chatham has been infested of late with burglars. Last week four merchants had their places broken open and robbed of small sums and goods. On Thursday morning they visited F. Woods' grocery and E. Spashett's grocery, but did not secure much plunder.

Mr. R. S. Gage, merchant of Newbury, narrowly escaped a severe burning the other day. The fire not burning very good Mr. Gage put some coal oil on it and as it did not burn as soon as he wished he opened the stove door to investigate. As he did so the oil blazed up and singed his face. Happily the injury was not serious.

There was a fire at James Dodge's grocery store, Hamilton, on Monday. The flames got a good headway and burned the contents of the store. Mr. Dodge's brother who is very ill, was in one of the rooms above the store, and was carried to a neighbor's house. The fixtures were insured for $250 and the stock for $250. The insurance will cover the loss.

In all the Roman Catholic churches in Ottawa, on Sunday last, the announcement was made that in consequence of the grip epidemic a decree had been received from the Pope giving the privilege to dispense with abstinence from flesh meat on Fridays until further notice, and the privilege also of dispensing with fasting or abstaining from eating flesh meat during the coming lent. Fish dealers all over the civilized world have been laying in large stocks of fish for lent, which begins on March 3rd.

A grant has been made by the county council of Essex, Ont., for the purpose of experimenting in raising sugar beets. An analysis of beet roots raised in Essex, made at the Ontario Agricultural College, showed as high a percentage of sugar as the German beet, and it is thought with improved methods of culture this may be increased. The soil and climate appear to be specially adapted to beet raising. To start a factory a capital of at least $50,000 is required. California growers estimate their profits at from $35 to $45 an acre, whereas corn yields a return of from $5 to $10 an acre.

The bookkeeper of the wholesale grocery firm of Messrs. Regan, White & Co. made a most astounding find on Sunday last when he entered the store to see if the stoves were all right. He saw at once that something was wrong. The till was pulled out and empty, and two holes drilled in the safe, and in front of it a full kit of burglar's tools. From all appearances they were at work when the key was turned in the front door and decamped. The firm do not lose anything, as they deposit every day.

Mr. W. T. Tassie who has been ill for some weeks, has sufficiently recovered to be on the street again. He is still very weak however.

CAUSES OF FAILURE.

We enter upon a wide field of inquiry when we seek to point out causes of failure in business, for they are as many and varied as the characters of individual business men. Usually, the cause of failure may be found in the man himself, and for that reason the cause is so seldom appreciated and gotten rid of. Men are ruining their busines daily by some business fault within themselves, while they are busy putting the blame upon "untoward circumstances" they are to a a greater extent the "builder of circumstances." There is seldom a loss without a cause which proper oversight, judgment, enterprise, thrift or business acumen could not have prevented. True, the wisest business men are often caught up in the whirl of disaster and swept from their feet without warning, and seemingiy in such a way that no possible foresight could have prevented it, but these instances are usually the result of some general financial flurry, which has its rise in the unbusiness-like methods of some men or ciass of men, the effect of whose folly unfortunately reaches to scores and hundreds of otherwise successful men. But the man who starts in business to-day in the corner grocery, and to-morrow is closed on a chattel mortgage, has simply overrated his ability or the public demand for his enterprise. So that we shall first undertake to set forth a few qualifications of success, a lack of any of which may be sufficient in your case to account for your loss, and in doing so we hope to escape a tiresome and fruitless repetition of stale advice.

1. You fail to keep a record of your business.

Here lies the source of much business disasters. It is easy to get along for a time without books. You cannot permanently succeed if you try it long.

A successful man would as soon think of giving away his goods, and yet you who are so systematic in this particular would be surprised to know the number of business men who get along without it. We had occasion recently to know something concerning the inner working of a large business now in the hands of a receiver, and found that for two years the business had been conducted on scraps of paper scattered in two drawers. No wonder a disgraceful failure ensued. Yet many merchants carry their accounts in a cheese box or in a hat, and could not tell for the life of them whether they are worth a thousand dollars above their debts or owe a thousand dollars more than they possess, and these men are surprised at their own failure. They have worked hard, lived economically, and always supposed themselves to be making money, while all these years their profits and more, perhaps, have been drawn out for personal use, and their original capital has gone into the spoiled potatoes and eggs, fruit, etc., which have been thrown away, and into unsalable goods now covered with cobwebs under the counter or back of the shelves. We draw an exaggerated picture, but true in kind, if not in degree, of a large percentage of losing merchants. They fail because they don't know their condition. They meet their bills for a time; pretty soon a draft comes as a little shock of surprise, but they meet it; a little later the drafts seem unusually large and frequent; one or two go back, money is scarce; well, crops are poor, hard to collect, solvent but slow, credit suffers a little, but still agoing and buying, now a little suit and another, strange business don't pick up! now a suit, now a returned draft, now an inquiring creditor, now a mortgage, now an assignment; liabilities $5,400, stock $2,300, appraised at $1,500 accounts estimated $1,000, and will probably pay 15 to 20 cents on the dollar. One year ago he could not have paid 35 cents on the dollar of his indebtedness, and yet he has given the business public to understand he was worth two thousand dollars. He is honest in his representations. He knows no better. He is as much surprised as are his creditors when the assignee figures it out as best he may from the scraps of information he can find scattered through the blank pages of a patent medicine recipe book.

Suppose this man, who has been in business four years and come to grief through neglect in keeping a record of his business, had every six months, or every year at most, been able to estimate to the cent his good and doubtful and bad accounts, his salable and unsalable stock, and his outstanding indebtedness. How quickly may he not have seen the drift of his business, and the chasm opening up to receive the little capital he had launched into the venture and withdrawn with comparative slight loss, and his business reputation unsullied, or at least made a change in the method of his business.

Keep an account of daily sales and expenses. The habit is easily formed. Foot it up weekly, or monthly at farthest. See to it that the expenses do not gain at as rapid a rate as the income. If they do, learn the cause and get rid of it.

By all means limit the amount drawn for personal use, and keep an account of the same.

Keep an accurate account of bills payable. Don't let a draft surprise you. If not able to discount your bills, don't let them, when due, find you napping. Prepare long enough ahead so that the money is ready when the draft is payable. Don't wait till the draft is accepted before thinking of the means of payment, but keep far enough ahead of your liabilities as not to let them step on your heels and trip you; and so a man who is perfectly solvent may be driven to failure by lack of preparation for payment of his debts solely from ignorance of the time of their maturity.

This may be your trouble. If so, it don't cost much for you to succeed.—The Collector.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Feb. 18, 1892.

GROCERIES.

Although the week has been an eventful one in the grocery trade it has not been more than ordinarily active in business. Retailers fill their wants in the same quiet way as they did before the break in sugar and in starch, evidently calculating upon the permanency of present advantages. The present indifference shows how completely the spirit of speculation has been extinguished in the general body of the trade. Business may be classed as fairly good for February. Orders ran towards general groceries for the most part, with some special leaning on the side of tea. Sugar was but fairly active. Canned goods were quiet, with some inquiries for round lots. Dried fruit was not in request except for small parcels. The break in granulated sugar and that in starch are making prices easy but are not exciting buyers, who do not look for an early revival of the old arrangements. Money is reported to be somewhat freer, but there are always some accounts that are hard to collect even when money abounds.

CANNED GOODS.

There are no bears among the jobbers of canned goods now. All appear to be satisfied that firmness and scarcity are real conditions, as the wholesale demand on this market has shown itself unslaked for a sufficiently long time to draw out any large supplies that have a more than suppositious existence. But nothing has transpired to weaken the situation ; on the contrary, values are firmer and there are more adherents of the firmness than there were at any other time since the season opened. Only very large lots could be moved at $1.05, and only some houses have large lots at their command. Those who have would just as soon put off the purchaser with a smaller lot at $1.10. The exchange of round lots between jobbers at different centres of trade is not as frequent as it was, owing to the firm price and the preference of dealers to sell in moderate-sized lots. Peas are as scarce as ever and easily worth $1.10 alone. Of tomatoes the same may be said. Corn alone can be had at $1.05 from some jobbers. All assorted lots are $1.10. Salmon is dull at $1.40 upwards, and this price is shaded to $1.35 in some cases. Lobster is not over-plentiful nor in marked request, but the price is steady and unchanged at from $1.90 to $2.75, according to brand.

COFFEES.

The demand for coffee does not shift much from week to week, and there never is sufficient excitement in upon this market to start a speculative spell. Hence prices maintain their general level very fairly. Good Rio could be disposed of if it were more plentiful, but it is still scarce. All Brazil coffees are firm outside on account of the light business done at Santos, where yellow fever still checks shipping. The prices here are 18c. upwards for Rios, from 27 to 33c. for Mochas and 27 to 32c. for Javas. In both Javas and Mochas the market is fairly stocked.

DRIED FRUIT.

Valencia raisins have no especial points of interest this week. They are as cheap as ever, the range of quality is as wide and stocks are full enough for business. Ordinary off-stalk are 5c. while choice are worth 5½c. Selected are 7 to 8c., and layers are the same price. Currants are firmer, the lowest point for satisfactory stock being 5½c. in barrels. Cases are selling better than they were at 7 to 9c. for fine Vostizzas. Trashy currants are offering less freely from New York, and appear not to find favor here. Prunes are unchanged at 7 to 7½c. for U's in cases, and 5¼ to 5½c. for casks. The trade in all dried fruits has been very limited.

NUTS.

Occasional small parcels go out along with general orders. The prices continue as quoted in Prices Current. Walnuts lead in the small demand that exists.

RICE AND SPICES.

No business of any moment has been transacted in rice since last report, the price remaining at 3⅞ to 4c. for ordinary grades.

Spices are likewise quiet, with no notable feature in any line. Prices keep to the course indicated in Prices Current.

SUGAR.

The event of the week upon which all trade interest centres is the break in the price of granulated, which has been caused by a suspension of the list. The wholesalers here at once brought prices down to 4½c. for that description of sugar, which is about the exact cost laid down here. The desire to get some of the trade is not to be extinguished by considerations of a vanished margin, and there are jobbers willing to sell granulated below this price, some of them being ready to take 4 7-16c., or may be 4⅜c. The latter two prices are probably coupled with the requirement that a certain proportion of yellow sugar shall be taken along with the granulated. For the position has just been inverted. Before, yellows were sold at a loss in order to make sales of granulated ; now granulated will be sold at a loss or at any rate without a profit in order to make sales of yellow. As might be expected there is a simultaneous movement being made to bring up the price of yellow, and the majority of jobbers now want 3⅝c., for the lowest grade, though 3½c. will still buy from some of them. The new arrangement applies only to the province of Ontario, though it is reported that in Montreal there is a temporary relaxation as well. So far as its effect on the sugar trade is felt, it has yet been unproductive of any excitement Buyers appear to have made up their minds that the thing will last, and therefore do not rush in to get sugar. They ought to take into consideration, however, not only the fact that the suspension may be cancelled when it has done its intended work or when it has been found incapable of doing it, but also that the sugar market just now is very firm. The dropping of the list is merely a local matter ; the essential position of the sugar market is not affected by it. The fundamental basis of prices is a firm one. Raw sugar is firm outside, and the estimated shortage in the beet crop is likely to be borne out.

Willet & Gray, New York, in their weekly Statistical say :—European markets continued fairly strong through the week, and our buyers accepted quite a large quantity of centrifugals from Cuba at the current quotations without asking for further decline. On one day some 50,000 bags were taken in Cuba for Boston at this price for shipment. There appears to be no disposition or necessity for either buyers or sellers to change the quotation for the present. Cuba is, no doubt, satisfied to dispose of a certain part of the crop as rapidly as wanted by the United States refiners, and even a strong market in Europe at above our parity of prices will not make much, if any, difference in Cuba just at this time. It will be a pleasure to refiners whenever Muscovados from the West Indies begin to be offered, as they will be next month.

The feature of the week has been an earnest desire by many grocers to avail of the present low prices to secure a stock of granulated for future delivery. Many attempts have been made to purchase in 10,000 bbl. lots, both here and in Philadelphia, but all refiners have declined the business except for prompt delivery. Some grocers have purchased largely in this way, and are putting the sugars into warehouses for a better market. Refiners also are storing refined to a considerable extent, the melting of raws being in excess of the immediate wants for consumption. Some difficulty is found in disposing of all the soft sugars made, and we note the rather singular feature of the present competition of refiners for each other's trade ; that while Philadelphia refiners are selling certain grades of sugar delivered in New York State, the New York refiners are selling certain other grades in the city of Philadelphia. Such instances, and others of low sales at the western competing points, give indications of no improvement in the state of the refined market for the present. Refined sugar is cheap, cheaper than ever before as compared with raw sugar, and refiners make no profits, still this condition may last a little longer. It will be interesting to see if refiners will continue present prices of refined when the rise in raw sugars begins in earnest. If so, it will be more evident that they have an ulterior object in view beyond earning present dividends.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

A light business in syrups, notwithstanding the easy prices that rule, is still to be reported. A very fair dark syrup can be had at 2c., the conflict between United States and Canadian refiners being still waged, to the advantage of buyers.

Molasses is very dull, sales occurring at long intervals and not amounting to much in quantity when they are made. New Orleans fine table molasses is to be had at 45 to 50c., and lower grades range from 30c. up. For West Indian molasses the price ranges from 30c.

TEAS.

The tea trade continues fairly active and is working improvement in the prices. Japans from low to medium grade are selling fairly well, prices most commonly paid being from 29 to 28c. In Congous at about 18c, there has also been a good business. Young Hysons are quiet, chiefly for the want of much low grade stock, the description that is most in call. Several thousand packages of low and medium grade Japans changed hands in Montreal last week. There have been no further large operations on New York and Detroit account upon this market. The higher grades of Japans are very scare everywhere.

MARKET NOTES.

H. P. Eckardt & Co. report increased sales for Diamond Crystal Salt for which they are agents. This salt does not harden and is perfectly pure. It is packed in sizes specially suitable for table and dairy use.

The statement of the total pack of canned goods in Canada to Dec. 31, 1891, has just been completed. The figures will be of very great value to the trade. Any packer who has not yet received his report should write at once to the Secretary, care CANADIAN GROCER.

PETROLEUM

The prices of refined are steady at a basis of 15c. Trade is easing up with the advance of winter.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports : Petrolia crude $1,29 per bbl ; Oil Springs crude $1.29½. Crude is worth from $1.29 to $1.32, according to quality and gravity, and the country is not over flooded with refined illuminating oil, so that the refining trade will be fairly brisk and steady till the beginning of May anyway. After that date we shall have three or four months of restricted demand, and then business may be expected to resume activity for the fall and winter months of 1892-93. The stock of crude is very moderate but ample for the requirements of the trade, taking into consideration the prospective summer production. If the larger producers take care of the raw material and the market in general is let alone and not influenced by outside considerations, the prospect for values for the raw material may fairly be put at $1.50 per bbl. at the least.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The scarcity which is always more or less a feature in the supply of good butter, is now a very marked one in all descriptions. Neither good nor bad is plentiful, and rolls appear to be nearly as scarce as tubs. Nor do other centres of business appear to be getting the stock. The markets of the country towns are evidently as poorly supplied as that of this city is. Some Brockville butter was brought in and sold off readily at high figures. All creamery has now a better chance of it, and acccording to quality is saleable at 20 to 27c. Good dairy tub commands 18 to 21c., while for medium prices have gone up to 16 and 17c. Large rolls are 16 to 18c., and are in request but scarce. This market is capable of absorbing a good large supply of acceptable butter just at present, and anybody who has such to sell would make no mistake by sending it along now.

Cheese is very firm, prime being quoted at 12½c., in small quantities. Less desirable fall makes shade down to 11¾c. For summer cheese the demand is dormant, and 9½c. is a nominal price.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES.—Cars are in better demand, but buying keeps on the under side of $2, $1.75 being the price most commonly obtainable f. o. b. In single barrels $2 to $2.50 is the range.

BEANS—Easy prices and dull business are in brief the conditions. Cars can be had at $1.15, and small lots change hands at $1.20 to $1.30.

CRANBERRIES—Over abundance and lateness in the season continue to depress prices, which are still easy at $6 to $7.

DRIED APPLES—The price is 4½ to 4¾c. here. Offers are not free. Cars are held in the country at 4½c. For small lots the price runs up to 5c.

EVAPORATED APPLES—Those who have any want 8c. for them. For small lots 8½ to 9c. are the prices asked and paid.

EGGS—The scarcity of fresh stock is very pronounced. Choice, new-laid stock would command 22c., only small lots of such being obtainable. For other grades in the category of fresh the price shades down to 18c. Limed eggs are firmer at 15c.

HIDES—Are featureless. Buying and selling go on with fair activity but they do not add or take off the fraction of a point on values, which remain on a basis of 4½c. for green and 5c. for cured.

HONEY—Cheaper sugar makes a duller market for honey, which is easy at 8 to 10c. for extracted. Only very fine brings the higher figure. In the comb the price is 14 to 16c.

MARKETS—Continued

HOPS—Are held at 18 to 25c. according to sample. Some were sold early in the week at 23 to 24c., but brewers are not free buyers at these prices

ONIONS—Sales are nearly all in small lots, and local stocks are not taking on supplies on account of the weather. Barrels are $2.25 to $2.50.

POTATOES—Were expected to take a turn for the better when the cold snap started, as that would check deliveries. But it has not been so, and cars can still be bought at 33 to 35c. Out of of store lots go at 45c.

SEEDS—The export demand is about exhausted and a dull market has succeeded the lively one of the two or three previous weeks. Alsike is $5.50 to $6.50, red clover $5.50 to $5.75, timothy $1.25 to $1.50.

SKINS—Good sheep skins are readily taken at $1 to $1.25 according to weight. Calfskins are quiet at 5 to 7c.

TALLOW—Refined is 5½ to 6c., and rough is 2c.

WOOL—The dulness of fleece wool is as deep as ever and sells at 18c. go through slowly.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

It is an easy matter selling hogs these days, as there is a prevalent feeling that there will be a probable shortage in raw material for a big pack. All that come in sell readily at $5.90 to $6.15, but it is reported that some holders are hanging on to their stock in the expectation of realizing $6.25. A few cars were sold this week at from $5.85 to $6.10, the weights being mostly on the upper side of 150. All products are firmer as a consequence of higher values in hogs.

BACON—Long clean is higher, selling this week at 7¾ to 8c. Backs are 10½c., bellies 10½c., rolls 8¾c.

HAMS—Are unchanged at 10½ to 11c.

LARD—The price has gone up on pure lard, which now stands at 9½c. for tubs and 10c. for pails. Compound is not in demand, though 8 to 9c. are the prices.

BARREL PORK—Old United States mess is $13.50 to $14, while new Canadian is $15.50. Short cut is $15.50 to $16.25.

FRESH MEATS—The supply is rather lighter and prices are firmer. Beef forequarters are 4½ to 5½c., hindquarters 7½ to 8½c, lamb 8 to 8½c., mutton 7 to 8c., veal 8 to 9c.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

The fish market is in a doubtful condition just now, as there seems to be a doubt as to whether the Lenten season will be observed this year or not, and until this is settled buyers will be very cautious as to the amount of stock they will lay in. Fresh fish are plentiful at present, but Labrador herring and haddies are scarce. Salmon trout has advanced in price nearly 50c. per half barrel; other prices are easy. Oysters are plentiful, with prices almost unchanged.

SALT.

The business in salt has been more lively than usual, the sales being larger than for some weeks. Two carloads of barrels, two of coarse sacks, and two of fine sacks have been moved, and a good trade has been experienced in small lots. Prices are firm.

GREEN FRUIT.

Every day that is a little warmer than the average is utilized by the jobbers to forward supplies to customers. The cold weather gives a set back to this class of trade. In lemons the movement has been fair. In 300's the price is $4 to $4 50 for both Messinas and Palermos, and in 360's the price is $3.50 to $4. Valencia oranges are rather quiet at $4 to $4.25, the call for Floridas rather crowding them aside in trade. Floridas are coming to hand still in bad condition, loss being occasioned by repacking. The price is $2.75 to $3.25. Bananas are scarce at $1.75 to $3.50. Pineapples are $3 to $3.50.

DRY GOODS.

Business at the wholesale houses is fairly brisk, orders being as numerous and as large as could be reasonably expected. The prices of cottons are firmer than they have been for some time, and dealers are hoping that the disastrous cutting of prices which have been going on for some time will not cease. Money is as plentiful as circumstances would seem to indicate.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Feb. 18, 1891.

GROCERIES.

Business since our last has shown some improvement, and travellers reports from the country are favorable. There have been few actual changes in any of the leading lines during the week, but sugar promises some new developments shortly. There has been a break in the Guild, the firm who caused the hitch last year again being the stumbling block. They have withdrawn from the agreement, and propose to operate to suit themselves, which may make matters interesting later on. Teas have been fairly active and the same can be said of other lines. Briefly the week affords fair ground for encouragement.

SUGAR.

The sugar market shows a better movement in refined, stock prices ruling unchanged, yellows 3½ to 4½c., and granulated 4½c. It is probable that there may be some new developments in the market before another week, as trouble has arisen in the Guild. It is understood that the old firm of kickers, a member of which shines especially in this respect, has withdrawn from the agreement, and will in future operate on a basis suitable to themselves.

MOLASSES.

Molasses is moving slowly, and there is but little business to note. Barbadoes brings 35c., while the American product sells at 27 to 28c. The syrup market is dull and unchanged.

TEAS.

The tea trade is better, all grades moving more freely especially blacks and greens. Stocks of good grade Japans are decidedly small, and a few lots are on spot and fetching good prices.

COFFEE.

Coffee is not moving very freely, but prices rule firm. There has been some trade on a basis of 18 to 20c. in Rios and Jamaicas.

RICE.

There is no business doing in rice, and prices are nominal. Millers notify jobbers that prices will advance 10 to 15 per cent. over last year.

DRIED FRUIT.

Dried fruits maintain the improvement shown last week. The market being steady and more satisfactory all round, prime Va-

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

Business has not made much progress this week, though inquiry has been more active. The firm views of holders of flour have not assisted in running up the record of sales made and cars shipped. The stocks on spot are considerable but there is no despondency on account of the dulness of business. Feed is not in as good a position as it was a week ago, easier prices and dulness being more prominent features than they were.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $5.20; strong bakers', $4.85; Ontario patents, $4.40; straight roller, $4.75; extra, $4.10 to $4.15: low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.25 to $5.50; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.80 to $4.85; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90; straight roller, $4.00 to $4.05; extra, $3.80 to $3.85; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL—Oatmeal is easier at $3.80. Cars can be had as low as $3.70. Cornmeal is unchanged at $3.80 to $4.

BUCKWHEAT FLOUR—Is featureless at $4.50 per barrel.

FEED—Bran is quiet at $15 to $16, and shorts at $17. Mixed feed is $23 to $25, cracked corn $1.25, feeding corn 53 to 54c., oats are 31 to 32c.

HAY—The price is firmer at $11.50 to $12 for No. 1 timothy and $10 to $10.50 for mixed.

STRAW—Is fairly active at $6 for wheat and $6.50 for oat.

MONTREAL.

There is a fair enquiry for flour for local consumption; but the volume of business continues very small at unchanged prices. The stocks in store show an increase of 1,892 barrels compared with a week ago, and a decrease of 4,741 barrels compared with a year ago. Patent spring, $5 to $5.25; Patent winter, $5 to $5.25; straight roller, $4.65 to $4.70; extra, $4 20 to $4.25; superfine, $4 to $4.10; city strong bakers', $5; strong bakers', $4.75 to $4.90.

Oatmeal is in slow demand at unchanged prices. The stocks in store show a decrease of 47 brls. compared with a week ago, and an increase of 3,148 brls. compared with a year ago. Standard, per bag, $2.10 to $2.20; granulated, $2.10 to $2.20; rolled, $2.10 to $2.20.

Feed is quiet and without change. We quote bran $16 to $17; shorts, $18 to $19, and mouillie $25.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

FLOUR—The demand for flour is still purely local, and consequently only a limited quantity is moving, the price has been gradually getting lower and is now quoted at $5.10 to $5.15 for Ontario High grade, Manitoba $5.85 to $5.90, with Medium Patents at $4.75 to $4.95.

CORN MEAL—is in fair demand with prices steady at $2.75 to $2.90.

OATMEAL—The price has declined some since last quoted, and the demand is improving, $4.45 to $4.55 being the ruling figures.

lencias are worth 5c. but we quote 4¾ to 5c. Currants remain firm on the basis of 5 to 5¼c. with some fair turnovers at these prices. There is little if any French prunes offering, but Bosnias move in a jobbing way at 5½ to 6c. Figs are offering at 10c. and dates at 5c. We quote prime Valencias 5c.; currants at 5 to 5¼c. for Patras, and 6 to 7c. for Vostizzas in cases; Bosnia prunes, 5½ to6c.; figs, 10c.; and dates 5c. per lb.

NUTS.

There is a jobbing business at the old prices. Grenoble walnuts still remain steady at the decline noted last week. We quote:—Almonds Tarragona 14 to 15c.; Almonds, Ivica 14 to 15c.; Almonds, common 10 to 11c.; Almonds, hardshell 07 to 08c.; Walnuts, Grenoble, new 12 to 12½c.; Walnuts, French 10 to 10½c.; Cocoanuts per 100 $4.50 to $5; Filberts 9 to 10c.; Pecans 16 to 17c.; Peanuts 07 to 10c.

CANNED GOODS.

Canned goods are not moving very freely and jobbers say the movement is up to the average. Stocks generally are small in all lines and are considered good property, so that prices are firm.

GREEN FRUIT.

There is the ordinary jobbing business in green fruit, with no change to mention. Offerings of bitter oranges noted last week have met with a fair reception at $3.50 to $4. Floridas move at $2.75 to $3.25, and Valencias at $3.50 to $3.75. Lemons are the same at $3.50 to $3.75.

APPLES.

Apples are unchanged, with nothing notable to mention. We quote 25 to 30c. for jobbing business. Evaporated are firmly held at 8 to 9c., and dried are dull at 5 to 6c.

HOPS.

Hops are quiet and unchanged. Some new offering of bulk stock are on the market, but nothing has been done in them, as brewers are indifferent. Prices nominal. Pressed hops had some speculative business on the basis of 16c.

FISH.

There is no business doing in fish on account of the short Lenten season.

PROVISIONS.

The market continues very firm for pork. Our quotations are unchanged for Canada short cut, but it is only because dealers cannot get any more money for it. The offerings are still small. No western short cut can be had under $17 per barrel. Packers are still cutting the prices of lard. The reason no doubt being the extreme dullness in demand. We quote:—Canadian short cut, per brl. $16.50 to $17.00; mess pork, western, per brl. $16.00 to $16.50; short cut, western, per brl. $17 to $17.25; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c; bacon per lb. 9c. to 10c; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¼ to 8c.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There is no change in either of these lines. Cheese is firm and nominal in the absence of business. Butter steady at following prices: Finest creamery 24 to 24½c.; finest Townships 18 to 20c.; Morrisburg and Brockville 18 to 19c.; finest Western 16½ to 17½c.

EGGS.

The local egg market was easier to-day, 14 to 15c. being now the range for Montreal limed. The local market is quiet, but with about ten days of bad roads and stormy weather dealers say the markets all over the country would pick up. Small shipments are being made every day, the Americans being afraid to deal heavily in case of a break in the market. The Boston market was quoted strong to-day at 23c. for limed, and 30 to 32c. for held fresh and 35c. for boiling stock.

GRAIN.

The local grain market is without particular change, with no movement of any importance in any grains. The stocks in store compared with those of a week ago show a decrease of 26,136 wheat, 16,147 rye, and an increase of 24,719 peas, 2,467 oats, 17,157 barley; compared with a year ago there is an increase of 165,460 wheat, 232,149 peas, 24,479 barley, and a decrease of 11,990 corn, 44,270 oats and 1,121 rye. We quote: No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04; peas, 73 to 74c. per 66 pounds; oats, 32c. to 34c. per 34 pounds; corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 45 to 46c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Feb. 17, 1892.

A slight increase in trade among the wholesalers is noticed, and with a continuance of good weather and roads a further improvement is confidently expected. Our market is quite bare of dry fish and molasses. In all other lines there is sufficient for all demands.

MOLASSES—The supply is rather small, and with a good demand prices have stiffened some, it is now selling at 35 to 36c.

EGGS—The market is well supplied, with prices steady at 16 to 17c.

BUTTER—A choice article in butter finds ready sale at 18 to 20c., though the market is well supplied with medium quality, which sells at 15 to 17c.

FISH—Dry fish still continue scarce, without any immediate prospects for a supply.

BEANS—Are quoted at $1.40 to $1.50.

Restore goods to their proper places as soon after using as possible.

THE POWER OF MONEY.

Money, says the old Book, is the root of all evil ; but one thing is certain, very little good can be done without it. It takes money to build churches, it takes money to pay the minister, it takes money to send the missionaries abroad, and in some cases it is absolutely necessary to get religion. In this light, therefore, the quotation above appears to be a contradiction, and a very decided one too. We have little faith in its general bearing. In the abstract it may be correct. In a business sense we have none. The power of money in business cannot possibly be overestimated. While great things can be done with very little money to commence with, nothing can be done without any. It is the greatest friend to go to market with ; properly used, it is the greatest friend in all conditions and circumstances. The business man who has sufficient capital to conduct his business is in such an independent position and possesses so many advantages over his less wealthy neighbor that he can adopt and institute economies through labor-saving devices, which places him in a position to compete on more advantageous terms than those less favored competitors.

In contradiction to the quotation given above, we might say that money was a friend in need, therefore a friend indeed. By arguing that money is so necessary to conduct a business properly and to take the most advantage out of all business transactions, we do not wish it to be understood that we regard money making as the only object to be sought after in this life. On the contrary, we believe that any one who pursues a course of this kind makes a grave error, and to put it plainly under such circumstances life is not worth living. To get the most out of life it must be enjoyed so that there will be nothing to mar it or in any way interfere with its hopes and pleasures. It is not the richest man who gets the most pleasure out of life any more than it is the poorest. How to live and get the greatest amount of pleasure requires a little common sense and a good deal of practical application.

Considering the question of money from a purely business standpoint, it is not wise to regard it as the all-powerful influence in trade. It has its limitations and its temptations, but its advantages far exceed every other consideration. The merchant with a good bank account has always got a true friend—one that he can rely upon and one that will always do good work whenever it is called upon. While most merchants appreciate the value of money, few of them realize its full influence. If they did they would in every way pursue a policy that would place their business in such position that their money would be utilized to its utmost. We know business men who are always anxious to have a bank account of certain dimensions. They will not under any circumstances permit it to be drawn upon below a certain figure; yet these same men could if they chose make considerable money by having their bills discounted. Going to the other extreme we also know business men who make it a rule to insist upon interest in their banks because they always leave a fixed deposit, and these men will owe bills for six months that ought to be paid in thirty days, because they believe that they are making money by the transaction. Neither of these courses is the right one to pursue. The man who pays his bills promptly and takes all discounts is the man who ought and generally does get the most satisfaction out of his money and his business life.

To the young merchant commencing in business we would advise him always to consider the power and influence of money in securing good terms, good buying, good management of his affairs and ultimate success. It all depends upon how business is started how it will succeed.—National Grocer.

ANSWERS TO CORRESPONDENTS.

Will you kindly tell me why the Crown brand of Black McDonald Tobacco can not be bought in Quebec and Montreal, while it can in St. John, N.B. Also, how does Index Smoking sell at fifty cents in Quebec and forty-eight in St. John, N.B.?

Ans.—1. It would seem as if Crown were made only for the market in the Maritime Provinces.

2. As to Index, it is possible that the manufacturers have given a cut of 2c. to compete with the product of the St. John factory. One who can explain the matter on any other theory will oblige by forwarding an answer.—ED.

CONSUMERS TO BLAME.

Consumers—the word used by the trade to represent people who purchase their necessary daily supplies from retailers—are largely to blame for the adulteration and coloring of articles of food. The first invoice of Japan teas brought to this country consisted of sun dried leaves, was free from coloring matter and of good quality, but it was unsaleable. The merchants who handled the tea were compelled to color it before the people would take it off their hands.

The canned French peas are not nearly as palatable as the ordinary American "June" peas, but because of their bright green color the foreign vegetable is used exclusively in many families.

Bright green pickles are also great favorites, and many other articles we might mention are adulterated and colored for the simple reason that consumers want them that way.—Merchant Sentinel.

"IS IT AN INQUISITION?"

The question has often arisen in my mind as to how far a merchant should go in giving information as to his capital, indebtedness, etc., to the various mercantile agencies, whose object is to arrive at the correct knowledge of the financial, social and business standing of the trader as a basis for credit in the great commercial centres. The retail merchant has rights which it is not in the power of any organization to invade. The jobber likewise has to assume risks which, even with the greatest facilities at his hand for information, must yet remain great risks. No person in private life will allow himself to be interrogated by a stranger as to affairs solely within the domain of his private home associations, without duly resenting the arrogance of the person making the request. This is perfectly proper, for if the sanctity of the home relation is to be intruded upon by any curious person, who may be desirous of gratifying his desire for gossip, it would soon be a world of blasted reputations, demoralized households and general chaos. In a business point of view this is entirely different. The merchant, for instance, has a thousand dollars; he contemplates going into a retail trade in some quiet country town. He realizes at a glance that his capital is entirely insufficient to properly carry on the business. He is a comparative stranger; has no relative from whom he can expect or receive financial aid to assist him. How is he to get out of his dilemma and be properly equipped for his mercantile battle? Right here the credit system of the country comes in to extend the helping hand and say to him, "If upon investigation you are found worthy, if you have ordinary sagacity and good business judgment and discretion, if your former record has been such that you have enjoyed the confidence of the people with whom you for years have mingled, and have a disposition and purpose to throw your whole energy into the successful prosecution of your business, we will help yon fight the battle." Here we have the positions of the jobber and retailer outlined. What is to bridge the chasm between these parties and secure to the jobber the information he desires to enable him to be a helpmeet to his brother? The answer is the "Mercantile Agencies." Now, if the retail dealer is not willing to give full information and accurate, upon all matters pertaining to his business, he never should seek to establish a credit, for you see it would make for the jobber too much of a jug handle thing "all on one side." How nonsensical it must appear to a merchant if he gives it but a moment's thought, that he is taking no risk whatever in asking a line of credit from a jobber, who is a total stranger to him, and yet unwilling to give him such information as to his standing as would enable the jobber to prescribe a line of credit for him, and who is to assume all risk. All large jobbing houses doing a business of any magnitude have a person known as the "credit man," whose sole duty is to pass upon the advisability of credit, the amount, etc. They have become so expert in framing questions and reading character that many of them would put some of our best lawyers to the blush. If the applicant for credit is of moderate means and conservative naturally, he should without reserve give all the information asked for, keeping in mind the fact that he, the merchant, is the accommodated and the questioner the accommodator. A merchant should talk over frankly with the house that serves him, the condition of his business from time to time. Such information is usually of benefit to both. The two principal commercial agencies, R. G. Dun & Co. and Bradstreet's make universal trade reports, and are used universally for the reason that reporting as they do all branches of trade they are less liable to oversights than if they reported simply one branch. As a rule these reports are re-written semi-annually. When you are called upon to be courteous and gentlemanly and feel that what is sought after from you is for your best interest and not for any prying into of your affairs. You must also bear in mind that money alone does not give you a basis for credit. Some of the most active and enterprising retail merchants in the country began without any money to speak of, but they had a reputation for honor, probity, candor and justice which was worth more to them than money capital. A line of credit would far quicker be extended to a poor man who was honest and zealous than to a knave, though he be rich, presuming, of course, that both have fair business ability. The fact must be borne in mind that much of the information relative to your antecedents, etc., comes from outside sources, and you are seen in the mercantile report as others see you. After long observation I have found this to be a fact. To have an honest and correct statement made for the trade, the merchant should be frank and honest with the canvasser for information. If he refuses to impart the information, it must be gleaned from outside sources, which in most cases is not satisfactory, as it frequently comes through biased channels. To be rated blank is suspicious; to be rated blank as to capital and rated well as to credit, speaks well. Bear this in mind. The mercantile reports are given from all the information obtainable from reliable sources. Had you not better give this information yourself? You will then have just cause for complaint if erroneously done. Do not look upon this business as an inquisition, but rather as a help to you to secure mercantile assistance. —Store Crank in American Grocer.

HOW TO MAKE ASSOCIATION MEETINGS INTERESTING.

It is not improbable that many persons lose interest and refrain from attending meetings of organizations of which they are members because of the monotonous and merely perfunctory manner in which the exercises are conducted. We make no reference to any particular organized body in the foregoing supposition; we know it holds good in many secret societies, and may, in a great measure, account for the slim regular attendance at the meetings of many mercantile associations.

The evil—for it is an evil, and a great one—of non-attendance by so many members is one of the greatest drawbacks to the prompt and satisfactory accomplishment of objects for which mercantile associations are formed. It is discouraging to the officers, who are in duty bound to attend regularly, causing them to feel that their efforts to make the meetings interesting and the association work of value are not appreciated, and they, too, may lose interest.

How to bring out the non-attendants is a problem that has worried the brains of officers and working members for a long time without a satisfactory solution having been discovered. There are hopeless cases, persons who affiliate themselves with organizations for the sole purpose of profiting by the work that others do, who are too selfish to lend a helping hand where help is needed for the welfare of others besides themselves, and who take no interest in anything that does not directly benefit their pockets. It would be useless to seek any good from such persons, but there is a much larger number —careless and seemingly indifferent though they may appear—whose presence at and interest in the meetings is desirable and to secure whose participation in the affairs of the organization it would be worth while to expend some effort.

With the view of increasing an interest in the meetings we offer a few suggestions, which, although not new, may be worthy of consideration.

1. The officers should always be prompt and unfailing in attendance, and the meeting should be called to order exactly at the designated hour.

2. The necessary routine business should be disposed of without being allowed to drag—not hurriedly, but with reasonable expedition.

3. In speaking to a motion or resolution, the member should be kept strictly to the subject in hand, and not allowed to wander off and bring in an extraneous matter. A judicious and prompt use of the gavel often facilitates business.

4. When a course of action has been decided upon it should be adhered to strictly and persistently. The motto should be: "Be sure you are right, then go ahead," never ceasing efforts until the object sought for has been attained.

5. After the necessary business has been disposed of a short entertainment, in the nature of discussions on some appropriate subject, addresses, recitations, and when possible a little music. This should be provided for in advance, as a rule, but once in the way of it the members would soon get into the spirit of the matter and display more talent than might be expected.

6. Besides the annual summer outing and the reception or banquet which most associations give each winter, one or more public meetings might be held this year, which would be of great benefit to the organization. To such meetings all non-affiliated persons whose membership is desirable should be especially invited. Short addresses, setting forth the aims and explaining the objects of, the association should be made, interspersed with such other appropriate exercises as would naturally suggest themselves.

7. Let every active member—such as usually "bear the heat and burden of the day"—constitute himself a standing committee of one to bring in the non-attending members, and to obtain recruits from the ranks of the non-affiliated.

The above suggestions are only briefly presented, but may lead to thought and action. If something of the kind is given earnest trial, we are confident much good will result therefrom.

An Eastern association has inagurated a system of ward meetings, and is making gratifying progress in awakening an interest in organized effort where none was felt before. It is a kind of missionary work from which a good harvest will be gathered. Something in the same line might be done in all the larger cities.

The importance and value of associated work has been demonstrated over and over again, but there is still much to do in the direction of educating business men up to the point of identifying themselves actively with the work which is for the benefit of all. —Merchant Sentinel.

Some United States packers are reported to be branding their pork as Canadian and shipping in bond through this territory for sale in European markets. This is resorted to for the purpose of disarming suspicion, particularly in France and Germany, where United States pork has a bad name on account of the old trichinosis scare. The Canadian Government is to be asked to frame regulations for the inspection of United States pork in transit through this country.

It is evident that the Patrons of Industry are going to make an energetic effort during the coming session to secure a reduction in the duties on certain commodities if petitioning can do it. Already printed forms of petition are being circulated for signature throughout the country, and one of these reached the Department of Agriculture the other day, signed by a large number of persons. The petition represents that the agricultural interests of the country are not in as prosperous a condition as the farmers desire, and that tariff legislation for the purpose of assisting the manufacturing interests of the country had been taken advantage of by the manufacturers to unduly enhance the price of many articles which are indispensable to the farmers in carrying on their vocation. The petitioners therefore pray that coal oil, binder twine and iron and its products be placed on the free list.

CERTIFICATES OF STRENGTH AND PURITY.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST,

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar-Refining.

The test by the Polariscope showed in yesterday's yield 99·90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

JOHN BAKER EDWARDS, P.L.D., D.C.L., F.C.S.,

Public Analyst for the District of Montreal, and Professor of Chemistry.

CHEMICAL LABORATORY, MEDICAL FACULTY, MCGILL UNIVERSITY.

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Company:

GENTLEMEN,—I have taken and tested a sample of your "EXTRA GRANULATED" Sugar, and find that it yielded 99·88 per cent. of Pure Sugar It is practically as pure and good a Sugar as can be manufactured.

Yours truly,

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The following extracts from the law relating to adulteration (Ch. 107, act 53 Victoria) are quoted for the benefit of the trade. They are the portions of that measure which relate to the sale, not the manufacture, of adulterated goods. Particular attention is called to this law at the present time when inspectors are descending upon the reputable merchants of the country, with apparently not the object of raising the standard of purity of the coffee sold, but to mulct somebody in penalty and costs. There is no law against the production of coffee which contains no harmful constituent, if such is properly labelled "compound." We repeat what we advised in a former article: If coffee is asked for, and coffee compound is offered, call the latter "coffee compound." Do not sell it as coffee.

Article 2. (e.) Food shall be deemed to be "adulterated" within the meaning of this Act,—

(1) If any substance has been mixed with it, so as to reduce or lower or injuriously affect its quality or strength;

(2) If any inferior or cheaper substance has been substituted, wholly or in part, for the article;

(3.) If any valuable constituent of the article has been wholly or in part abstracted;

(4.) If it is an imitation of, or is sold under the name of, another article;

(5) If it consists wholly or in part of a diseased or decomposed, or putrid or rotten animal or vegetable substance, whether manufactured or not, or in the case of milk or butter, if it is the produce of a diseased animal, or of an animal fed upon unwholesome food;

(6.) If it contains any added poisonous ingredient, or any ingredient which may render such an article injurious to the health of a person consuming it.

(g) The foregoing definitions shall not apply:

(4) If any articles of food not injurious to the health of the person consuming the same are mixed together and sold or offered for sale as a compound, and if such articles are distinctly labelled as a mixture, in conspicuous characters, forming an inseparable part of the general label, which shall also bear the name and address of the manufacturer.

Article 6. Section 3. The inspector may prosecute any person manufacturing, selling, or offering or exposing for sale within the city, county, town or village for which he is appointed inspector, any article of food, drug or agricultural fertilizer which has been certified by any public analyst to have been adulterated within the meaning of this Act.

Article 7. Any officer may procure samples of food, drugs or agricultural fertilizers which have not been declared exempt from the provisions of this Act, from any person who has such articles in his possession for the purpose of sale, or who sells or exposes the same for sale; and he may procure such samples either by purchasing the same or by requiring the person in whose possession they are to show him and allow him to inspect all such articles in his possession, and the place or places in which such articles are stored, and to give him samples of such articles, on payment or tender of the value of such samples. 48-49 V., c. 67, s. 7.

Article 8. If the person who has such articles in his possession, or his agent or servant, refuses or fails to admit the officer, or refuses or omits to show all or any of the said articles in his possession, or the place in which any such articles are stored, or to permit the officer to inspect the same, or to give any samples thereof, or to furnish the officer with such light or assistance as he requires, when required so to do in pursuance of this Act, he shall be liable to the same penalty as if he knowingly sold or exposed for sale adulterated articles knowing them to be adulterated. 48-49 V., c. 67, s. 8.

Article 11. When the officer has by either of the means aforesaid, procured samples of the articles to be analyzed, he shall cause the same to be analyzed by one of the analysts appointed under this Act, and if it appears to the analyst that the sample is adulterated within the meaning of this Act he shall certify such fact, stating in such certificate, in the case of an article of food or a drug, whether such adulteration is of a nature injurious to the health of the person consuming the same; and the certificate so given shall be received as evidence in any proceedings taken against any person in pursuance of this Act, subject to the right of any person against whom proceedings are taken to require the attendance of the analyst, for the purpose of cross-examination. 48-49 V., c. 67, s. 11.

Article 20. Whenever any article of food, any drug, or any agricultural fertilizer is reported by any analyst as being adulterated within the meaning of this Act, the Minister of Inland Revenue may, if he thinks fit, order such article, and other articles of the same kind and quality which were in the same place at the time the article analyzed was obtained, to be seized by any officer of Customs or Inland Revenue, and detained by him until an analysis of samples of the whole is made by the chief analyst. 48-49 V., c. 67, s. 20.

Article 21. If the chief analyst reports to the Minister of Inland Revenue that the whole or any part of such articles are adulterated, the Minister may declare such articles, or so much thereof as the chief analyst reports as being adulterated, to be forfeited to the Crown; and such articles shall thereupon be disposed of as the Minister directs. 48-49 V., c. 67, s. 21.

Article 23. Every person who, by himself or his agent, sells, offers for sale, or exposes for sale, any article of food or any drug, which is adulterated within the meaning of this Act, shall,—

(a.) If such adulteration is, within the meaning of this act, deemed to be injurious to health, for a first offence incur a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, and costs, and for each subsequent offence a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars and not less than fifty dollars, and costs:

(b.) If such adulteration is, within the meaning of this Act, deemed not to be injurious to health, incur for each such offence, a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars and not less than five dollars, and costs.

2. Provided, that if the person accused proves to the court before which the case is tried that he did not know of the article being adulterated, and shows that he could not, with reasonable diligence, have obtained that knowledge, he shall be subject only to the liability to forfeiture under the twenty-first section of this Act. 48-49 V., c. 67, s. 23.

Article 25. Every person who knowingly attaches to any article of food, or any drug, any label which falsely describes the article sold, or offered or exposed for sale, shall incur a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars and not less than twenty dollars, and costs. 48-49 V., c. 67, s. 25.

INTERNAL WEAKNESS IN COMBINES.

Honor is not more necessary than discipline under fire to keep the units of a combine together. The combine is an organization of sellers exposed to the irregular and incessant attacks of unorganized buyers. The buyers are all the sharper because they are unorganized, as there is the pressure of antagonistic individual interests among them to make every man look out very especially for himself. And they can just keep enough friction going on among the particles of the combine to make union a hard thing to preserve. If the men they had to buy goods from were agents of the combine as a whole, not the salesmen of particular houses in it, there would be less centrifugal force exerted by buyers. The "pooling" method goes one step in this direction by the employment of one man as the secretary of the concern, and investing him with the authority to look into books, etc., to examine whether irregularities have been committed or not. His report of the total proceeds of sales determines the amount to be divided among the parties to the combine, in the proportion agreed upon at the outset. To reduce the strain upon the agreement, the travellers should be, as the secretary is, the agents of the combine. Then there would be less heard of concesstions granted by rival travellers, for the rivalry of the travellers is to a very considerable extent only the transmitted rivalry of the houses they represent. Personal rivalry there is of course among them, but the emulation of travellers for the same house is a much more easily regulated thing and not liable to lead to excess to obtain business. It would be the same way with the travellers of a combine. All representing the one concern, their zeal would be toned down, and the reported liberality of one would not provoke another to any complaint that would disturb the union. This would also reduce expenses, one of the avowed objects of combines. Further, it would give even-handed justice to all the manufacturers. At present, a "pool" arrangement assures everybody included in it that he will get his proportion of profits, whether he has an energetic staff of travellers on the road or none at all. The houses which push busines the most briskly are bringing up the profits of those who make the least effort, and are bearing the expenses as well of a portion of the latters' canvassing. The "pool" system, carried out to its legitimate issues, requires the accompaniment of a travelling staff employed by the combine.

Buyers have seen one combination after another go to pieces, and it is little wonder that they are skeptical of the cohesion of any that now exist. There is a disposition on the part of many people to consider themselves the dupes of the salesman if they finally buy upon the terms he will give no option from. They blame themselves the more if some gloating competitor tells them he did better with So-and-So's traveller, and they are ten-fold harder to deal with next time. The traveller is made by politic or by credulous customers to believe that there are deviations where there are none, and the difficulty he finds in the way of doing business tends to confirm his suspicions. He reports to his house what he probably believes or what he may accept only as a convenient way of accounting for light reports. And his house is apt to share his suspicions or to be deceived by his subterfuge. And thus a disintegrating principle may creep into a combine where everybody is honorable. The breath of suspicion can unmake combines as it can dissolve matrimonial unions.

GIVE THE BOYS A CHANCE.

"The best result can be obtained by educating men in our own offices, if possible, from boys up through the various positions of entry clerk, and so on, as they thus become familiar with our own business methods and acquire familiarity with ways of handling questions that may arise, peculiarly fitting them to take our own places in selling goods."—New England Druggists' Exchange.

From our last week's issue under the caption of "Travellers' Requirements," we clip the above very sensible remarks from the report of the special committee of the New England Druggists' Exchange, and cannot refrain from applying the same to the wholesale grocery trade of Canada, as in our experience we have repeatedly observed houses doing diametrically the opposite, with the natural unsatisfactory results. There are two very important features bearing on the above quoted suggestion, one the benefit and satisfaction of sound business transactions to the firm, and the other the justice done to the clerk who enters the firm's employ with the ultimate and laudable idea of becoming salesman and traveller, and who looks to advancement in the house as an appreciation of his services.

The benefits derived by the house in educating its travellers from the post of office boy through every part of the work are too manifest to require enlargement, and it is not our purpose to enter on a detailed description of the same, but a few of the more important results of such a course may be noted. It is natural that a clerk who has been thoroughly grounded in the business in all its branches—invoicing, credits, custom house work, and sample room—who has a knowledge of the profits and losses, the cost of running the business, the acquaintance of the customers made in the sample room, will have a very great advantage in representing the house on the road, and will have a much better impression on the retailer than a new man who mayhap has been formerly representing a rival house, and, human-like, been depreciating his present employers. It follows, then, that the sales and profits will be more satisfactory to the firm.

The feature, however, which in our opinion deserves closer attention is the injustice done to the competent house salesman in not giving him an opportunity to show his value on the road and giving him the advancement he desires and which his merits and long services entitle him to. Too many of our wholesale merchants seem to overlook the fact that they themselves have risen from the ranks, have worked in offices, and salesrooms and travelled throughout the length and breadth of the land, and they should remember how they appreciated the opportunity granted them by their employers to go on the road, and should go and do likewise. The clerk is only human, and as such has the human desire to make more money, and knowing that the travelling salesmen as a rule, obtain the best salaries, desires to try the road himself, and in all justice should be given an opportunity to show his worth. It goes without saying, that his best efforts will be put forth in the interests of his employers. The "old timer" is usually engaged for his "connection" on the road, very often a vague and intangible or unprofitable one, and is not so apt to put that energy and vim into the work that would come from the young fledgling who is properly trained to fly.

And then how much more satisfactory all dealings would be to all concerned. How readily such a trained house traveller (if we may coin the word) could settle disputes, and make allowances to the satisfaction of the customers. As he would be thoroughly posted in these matters, he would know how far he could consistently go and save trouble with the house, and oftentimes retain or build up a wandering account. How much correspondence, how many disputes would be saved by a knowledge of inside work. How positively he could speak as to costs, values, credits, discounts, losses on goods, the policy of the house, etc. In short there is no phase of mercantile disarrangement in which he could not act more promptly and satisfactorily than one not so trained, and if such clerks see that their employers will not give them the "next turn" they cannot be blamed for seeking an opening with some other house. This we have known to occur repeatedly, and a sad departure it has proved for the "old" house, as the "ins and outs" and "pointers" were invariably and successfully used against it. It seems to us that employers do not realize the fact that their juniors are "big boys now," and their treatment of them should be as "men" and not "boys." A clear-sighted employer will always give his trained salesmen the next turn, and if the young man has ambition he will prove credit to his calling, an honor to his family and friends, and a pillar of strength to his employers. Give the boys a chance.

OUR CORRESPONDENCE COLUMNS.

There are questions of vital importance to the grocery trade which ought to be discussed in a larger arena than the room in which an association holds its meetings. It is due to the questions themselves, it is due to the persons who can assist in their solution, and it is due to the trade, that not one ray of clear light upon any grocery matter should be kept hidden under a bushel. The trade can count a large number of men in its ranks whose opinions deserve more consideration than they get, and whose opinions would meet with wide consideration if they were given prominence. There would be a good deal of doubt dispelled and much error removed if the clear thinkers and well-informed members of the trade were but a little more generous with their gifts. There is no knowledge so much valued by men of any calling as that which comes from persons whom Bacon calls "experts," the experienced and observant men of the calling. The more of that there is diffused the more will the common good be promoted.

All this leads up to the special proposition that no grocer should neglect the privilege, which he has as a subscriber to this paper, of expressing his views in it upon any matter that comes within the scope of grocery experience. Every item helps to swell the general mass, and no man should withhold his mite. The snowball would not increase with rolling if snowflakes counted for nothing. Enthusiasm, which is so necessary to the success of a local association, can be wrought up on a large scale by the discussion of trade questions, by trade workers, in the trade press. And that exactness of statement, that scrutiny into facts, that fulness of treatment which are needful for the clear delineation of truth are possible in a written article or letter as they are not in the cramping restrictions of a speech to the question. Opinions also get more careful attention from the reader than they do from the hearer, as they can be more calmly weighed by the fireside than in the debating room, where usually everybody's mind is rather upon what he is going to say himself than upon what the speaker of the moment is saying.

The letters which so far have appeared in THE GROCER on "Calling for Orders" illustrate the foregoing general statements. It just happens that there is one common chord in these letters, but variety in the presentation of the various views greatly enhances the interest which surrounds the question. If there were a hundred letters on the same question with the same element of agreement among them, there would be a hundred phases of the same argument, each with its own way of impregnating conviction, and each convincing a different style of man. That is the advantage of full discussion.

We earnestly invite the opinions of readers upon the current topic of correspondence, "Calling for Orders," and commend to them the letters that have already appeared. Upon all questions communications are welcomed and are urgently requested. No man should mistrust his power of expression. The matter is what is valued. The editorial sandpaper can fix up the manner, if necessary, but usually that can be left safely in the hands of the writer. The debate is of the "open" order, with no special party to it called out in any particular sequence. Volunteers are wanted to enliven and enlighten the subject. If made full and free use of, this mode of sifting and testing usages and opinions will do more good than it is possible for an association to do. Let the next speaker mount the rostrum. Our correspondence columns are for the trade.

LENT AND THE FISH TRADE.

The indications are that fish food will be a costly article before the Lenten season is over, especially in the markets here. The clergy of the Roman Catholic church have made no announcement as to the observance or non-observance of the old custom, and this means, probably, that the people will use little meat as usual during Lent, and among the Catholics and High Church Episcopalians fish will be used. Such being the case, salted, pickled, dried, and frozen fish will be in good demand, and there is no denying the fact that the supply of these classes is not large.

At present undoubtedly there is a fair stock among the dealers, especially in barrelled Labrador herring and several other classes of sea fish. But this seeming abundance was brought about only by the Toronto dealers taking advantage of the over-carefulness of the Montreal dealers and laying in all the stock they could, and as soon as the market in Montreal returns to its normal state and the demand sets fairly in, we may expect a general advance in prices, the primary cause being the scarcity of fish in Nova Scotia and in the New England States.

Again, eggs are commanding a good price just now, and as the consumption always increases at the beginning of Lent, they will probably remain at a fairly high price, and will cause fish to be in greater demand.

Another point to be considered is that on account of the lateness of the Lenten season this year, if the weather becomes at all mild, a large quantity of ice will be needed to preserve frozen stocks, and this will enhance the price very considerably.

All these circumstances are worthy of the consideration of the fish dealer. He can with reasonable safety conclude that a large quantity of fish will be used, as in former seasons, because people like a change from the heating meat diet of the cold season, and moreover they have been looking forward to this state of affairs. The desire for a change of diet, made stronger by ancient and regular custom, will hold in spite of a seeming leaning towards indulgence on the part of some ecclesiastics.

TORONTO PEDLARS' LICENSES.

The committees appointed by the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association to wait on the various aldermen constituting the Markets and Health Committee of the City Council, did as they were instructed, and presented the grocers' views upon the pedlars' license question to each of the individuals of that committee. On Friday night last the Markets and Health Committee met, and representatives of both the grocers' and the pedlars' side of the controversy were on hand. To each party permission was given to state its case. Mr. Mills did so on behalf of the grocers, and Mr. Pocock on behelf of the pedlars. But the arrangement agreed upon was not followed out. Three speakers were to hold forth on each side and no man was to speak twice. But Mr. Pocock was sufficiently irrepressible to force the committee to listen to a second harangue from himself, and after the first speech on the grocers' side there appeared to be no one ready to make a second. The pedlars outnumbered and outspoke the grocers. They had also another advantage in having enlisted the auspices of the Trades and Labor Council in their cause, and one of that potent body was present to raise his voice on the pedlars' side. And it is significant of the respect in which the solid vote controlled by the Trades and Labor Council is held, that this representative, though neither a grocer nor a pedlar, was permitted to speak on the question between the grocers and pedlars. When Mr. White, a member of the Executive Committee of the Grocers' Association, at length rose to say a word for his side of the case there was a disposition among some of the members of the committee to shut him off. This, however, was given up, and Mr. White spoke very plainly and unflatteringly of the evident dread in which the adverse influence of the Trade and Labor Council was held when one of its members was allowed to thrust himself in, without being forbidden, between the pedlars and the grocers when they appeared before the Committee.

When all the speakers that were permitted to say anything were heard, the committee took the matter into consideration, and the result of their deliberations issued in a resolution to cut down the price of pedlars' licenses from $30 to $20. The defeated grocers then concluded to call a mass meeting of the grocers, butchers and fruit dealers of the city for Tuesday night last, but for some cause they appear to have abandoned that idea and no meeting was held.

The Excelsior Life Insurance Co.'s annual report which appears in another column, shows the company to be in a flourishing condition; last year proved to be an eminently successful one. Its prospects for the future are extremely good.

CALLING FOR ORDERS.

DEAR MR. EDITOR.

For myself, I may say, that if experience should call one out in this matter, then I should stay silent. I have none, and unless convinced by other letters which may appear in your excellent journal, I shall continue in the same frame of intelligence. It may be, however, that negative experience would be useful in this case, and if so my thoughts are these :

The first great principle in selling anything, is to please the customer. I place that above every other consideration. If this be correct, than how to please is a very important question, and most difficult of answering. In city trade, quality is an important consideration, but not more so than price. These are a team hard to separate. I have heard of some shopkeepers, who have done away with price altogether, and who sell entirely by quality. These are rare, and generally, sell on credit ; their cash customers only using the team. As we are now dealing with a subject which is a creator of credit, these men will no doubt favor us with their views during the course of the discussion. I find then, that in order to give complete satisfaction, my customers must see my team of "quality and price." To do this they must of necessity visit my store frequently, which, did I send for their orders, they in all probability would not. Another consideration : If one desires to do a cash business, the system of which we speak operates very much the other way, for this reason—the woman who has the cash to "pay on delivery," and who buys from a party calling on her, either cannot go out to see things for herself, or is more fond of stopping at home than most women. We may say then that it caters to credit people, and if so, is of no use to the cash store. The only people of whom care is necessary in this matter, are those having large houses ; and also institutions. To these, every keen shopkeeper will of course pay attention, but generally speaking, the largest buyers are the keenest, and they know without being told, that by visiting shops personally, bargains may be secured and a better selection made. For odds and ends, they are willing enough that the travelling salesman should see after, but large bills of goods, never, that is, any of them worth looking after. So we might go on. You cannot push your fancy goods, unless you see your customers ; you cannot operate your bargain counter, unless the customers call ; and you cannot manage to personally sell a good bill of goods to likely buyers, if they stop at home, and give the orders hurriedly to a waiting stranger, who mayhap is only too glad if the orders be short, so that he may get over his "rounds"

These are the flying thoughts, Mr. Editor, of a person who knows nothing about the matter, as he has had no experience, never having sent, as a regular thing, for an order.

Yours truly,

RICHARD A. DONALD.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

COBOCONK, Feb. 15, 1892.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—I notice an answer you print in your paper in regard to small measures and large. I want to know if the same does not compel every man to sell by the large measure. Now I have to sell by the large measure. I am not satisfied with the answer you gave the writer. I think if we have to sell by the large measure in Coboconk, the same has to be done in Toronto. It is not expected that every retail merchant only has to measure and to weigh all his goods correctly. Now I think that every barrel of sugar put out of the warehouses should show at the refiners' all the sugar we get on the head with pencil mark. How easy is it to add 10 or 15 lbs. to each barrel. I think it time that some steps are taken to protect the retail trade.

Yours truly,

A. H. CARL.

[Mr. Carl's view that every package, such as a barrel, bag, box, etc., should contain some definite weight, prescribed by law, is a good one, and it is a pity that it is not embodied in commercial practice. Foreign goods we cannot regulate. The people of other countries have their own units of weight and measure, and probably have laws to uphold these weights. In the case of oysters, the accident that the same name is given to a unit of measure in the country from which they are shipped as is given to a different-sized unit here leads to confusion. The package is a 5-gallon package in the United States, but holds only 4 of our gallons, and the duty paid on it upon its way into this country is for 4 gallons. But our jobbers still are apt to call the package a 5-gallon one, though they only charge the price of 4 gallons.—ED.]

THE OFFICIAL ANALYSIS OF COFFEE.

HAMILTON, Canada, Feb. 19, 1892.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER.

DEAR SIR,—I had no idea of so soon again addressing you, but the enclosed slips speak for themselves, and the subject is one of very great importance to the grocery trade of the Dominion. The admixture of chicory and farinaceous substances with coffee has been carried on since Mr. Coffee was a very young baby, and not only is the mixture demanded by the majority of consumers, but there is no idea of anything injurious to the system in the ingredients used, in fact it is a question whether the drinking of an infusion or decoction of roasted peas, wheat, rye or corn would not be more beneficial to the system than coffee, which many persons cannot use on account of its disturbing their internal economy.

Where then is the necessity or what is the reason for the government swooping down on one or two individuals, and subjecting them to undesirable notoriety and heavy and unwarranted expense, without a solitary note of warning, and being quite unaware that they were in anyway acting contrary to the laws of the land, in doing what is and has been the universal custom of the trade? I question whether a person travelling over the Dominion and buying "a pound of coffee" would get pure and unadulterated coffee unless he specially asked for it, and still less likely if he asked for cheap coffee.

It will I think be a material assistance to the trade if you will devote considerable space to this important subject, quoting section E of article 2, chapter 107, also article 8, also article 3, chapter 26, 53 Victoria. I confess myself at a loss to understand how legitimate business can be carried on if the provisions of these acts are to be enforced. Far be it from me to insinuate that the merchants of Canada are not honorable gentlemen, but I have grave doubts whether one of them would not be "mene, mene" were they to be weighed in the balances of this extraordinary and uncalled—for legislation. If injurious ingredients are being used to the detriment of the public health, it would be impossible to exercise too much strictness.

I may say that I wrote to the Commissioner, having been advised by the Collector not to pay the enormous amount of fourteen dollars for analyzing half a pound of coffee, but I was not honored by a reply. I fancy it would be a grand scheme to wipe out the national debt, just to assets every merchant ninety-four dollars for carrying on his business. The innocents would be in the minority.

Yours truly,

HENRY H. LAING.

[The following, from the Hamilton Spectator, is one of the clippings enclosed by Mr. Laing : Two rather unusual writs were issued yesterday. The plaintiff in each case is Her Majesty Queen Victoria, and the defendants are W. H. McLaren, the well-known grocer, on King William street, and H. H. Laing, proprietor of the Hamilton bargain store. The actions are for penalties for the alleged adulteration of coffee, the fine for selling same and the cost of the analysis, amounting in all to about $94 in each case. The penalty for adulterating coffee is $50, for selling same $30, and the cost of analysis $14.

It is evident that the Government has had a detective here getting samples of the coffee, and he has probably got a number of other merchants on the list. The actions have been taken through the department of justice at Ottawa. The minister communicated with Walker, Scott & Lees, barristers, of this city, and sent them the papers in each case with instructions to sue. The firm, in consideration of the high standing of both merchants, felt somewhat loth to take immediate action and wrote back asking the Government if they had not better notify the parties charged and arrange for the penalties being quietly paid. A prompt reply was received to issue the writs at once, and the communication seemed to indicate that it was not the penalties the Crown was after, but to make an example of somebody

Among the papers forwarded are documents showing that the samples were obtained by a detective or inspector named J. Watson and were handed to Dr. Ellis, of Ottawa, the Dominion analyst, who sends a certified paper showing that one sample is adulterated with chicory and farinaceous matter and the other with farinaceous matter only.

It is probable that Inspector Watson has got more than these two samples when in Hamilton, and more cases may be expected later on. Of course the adulteration as shown by the analysis is quite harmless and very generally used in the trade, and the action of the department seems directed towards the suppression of this sort of thing. It is rather rough on the merchants mentioned that they should be selected as the "examples" to be made, as both are reputable and highly esteemed business men.

The writs have been issued in the county court and placed in the sheriff's hands for service.

THE POWER OF MONEY.

LONDON, Ont., Feb. 22nd, 1892.

DEAR CANADIAN GROCER,—I will not complain without first acknowledging indebtedness for many valuable helps and suggestions from time to time found in your paper. Glad for the high moral tone advocated by you in business matters. Stick to that, it will be good for the young men whose business principles may not be fully decided upon. Give us plenty of articles touching the goods we handle. Its satisfactory to be able to tell one's customers the country of growth, the real differences of whatever sort and any interesting facts. You will not tire us with articles on tea. Be sure they are reliable for we are apt to pin our faith to them.

And now allow me to say, I think if you had noticed particularly the article "The power of money," page 22, issue 19th February, you would not have allowed its insertion. You must assume some responsibility for its matter when found in your print. It tries to call in question a passage in the word of God. Let God's word be true. If you had known the scriptures you would have seen that the article starts wrong : it writes "Money, says the old Book, is the root of all evil," it should have written, the love of money, says the old Book, is the root of all evil.

I trust many of your readers believe implicitly in the truth of God's word, and we are sorry to see any article casting reflection upon it.

Yours,

R. W. S.

[It would have been just as well if the writer of the article reproduced on page 22 of our last issue, had said what he wanted to say as to the potency of money, without making any reference to Scripture. We should be sorry to offend sensibilities that we hope will be always acute in ourselves.—EDITOR.]

THE EXCELSIOR LIFE INSURANCE CO.

OF ONTARIO, (LTD.)

The Annual Meeting of this Company was held in Toronto, on February 9th, at the Company's Offices, 66 and 68 Adelaide-street east. The attendance of shareholders was large and representative, and the greatest unanimity characterized the entire proceedings.

Among the shareholders were Messrs. J. R. Armstrong, Ottawa ; William Gillies, Carleton Place ; S. J. Parker, James Craig, Owen Sound ; Geo. E. Weir, Dresden ; J. F. Palling, M.D., W. Kennedy, Barrie ; John Rowland, Collingwood ; Rev. John Vickery, Thornbury ; E. F. Clarke, M.PP., John Knox Leslie, J. W. Lang, James L. Hughes, Joseph J. Davies, John Ferguson, M D., D. Fasken, E. H. Tallmadge, James Boddy, James D. Lee, J. J. Graham, Frank Wootten, Capt. Charles Hood, Henry Nixon, etc , Toronto.

The President, Mr. E. F. Clarke, M.P.P., occupied the chair, and submitted the Director's Annual Report, together with certificates of the Actuary and Auditors.

The report shows that the past year was an eminently successful one for the Company. 495 applications for $596,250 were received, of which 447 for $538,750 were approved and Policies issued ; 13 for $14,000 were declined, and 35 for $43,500 were on hand awaiting completion. During the 14½ months the Company had been in business 666 applications for $877,750 were received, and 607 Policies were issued for $806,250. The amount of Insurance in force December 31st, was $715,250. The income of the Campany during the year was $27,453.31, and the expenditure for management, etc., $14,593.30. The net assets of the Company, which were increased during the year by the handsome sum of $24,905.74, now amount to $68,733.97. The liabilities were $16,581.56, including the reserve of $14,788. The net surplus on policy-holders' account is $52,-152,14, making with the reserve and uncalled capital, total available assets of $368,595.41, for security of policy-holders.

The Chairman stated that the Company had many causes for congratulation. The immunity from death losses evinced care in the selection of risks, and would be no mean factor in promoting the future welfare of the Company. The expenses for salaries and general management were remarkably small, proving that the strictest economy has been exercised in all departments. The average rate of interest upon investments was larger that that of any other Canadian Company, and as the question of security is first considered, this fact is all the more satisfactory. The Excelsior has a larger per centage of assets to liabilities than any other Company. The Government Blue Book shows, that of 29 Companies doing business in Canada in 1890, 15 wrote up a larger amount of business than the Excelsior did last year, while 14 did less business. The Chairman was only aware of two Canadian Companies which did a larger business at the same stage of their career. A comparison with the average business of 25 of the largest American Companies is even more gratifying, and shows nearly $100,000 in favor of the Excelsior.

The Company is organized on a particularly strong basis. Its 239 shareholders are distributed in 38 cities and towns of the Province, and comprise many of Ontario's most prominent and influential citizens. The Company, by confining its operations to the Province,will secure a lower rate of mortality than that experienced by other Companies doing business over a wider territory.

The success of the Company has been phenomenal, and its prospects for the future are extremely good. Its progress in respect to growth and financial strength has been such as to warrant the public support. The large amount of business written up is an evidence that the plans and policies of the Company are liberal and attractive, and the fact that the lapsed and cancelled policies amounted to only 11 per cent, is a proof of the confidence which the policy holders have in the future of the company. The Excelsior will strive to merit a continuance of that confidence by dealing in a fair and equitable manner with its patrons, by avoiding excessive estimates, by demanding from its agents a strict avoidance of every form of misrepresentation, and by insisting that they shall always compete for business solely on the plans and merits of the Company.

The report of the Board was unanimously adopted.

The retiring Board was re-elected, and the position of the Company throughout the Province has been greatly strengthened by the consent of the following gentlemen having been obtained to act as Directors :

Hon. Peter White, Pembroke; Capt. John Gaskin, Kingston ; Joseph J. Davies, Toronto ; Hon. Senator Gowan, Barrie ; S. J. Parker, Owen Sound ; and S. A. MacVicar, Sarnia.

The Chairman said he had great pleasure in bearing testimony to the faithfulness and efficiency with which the various officers and agents of the Company had discharged the duties devolving upon them.

A cordial vote of thanks was tendered the Directors for their services during the past year, and for having voluntarily waived all fees up to December 31st.

Before the meeting was brought to a close several of the Company's agents and shareholders delivered short addresses, and expressed themselves as having unbounded confidence in the Company's future.

At a subsequent meeting of the Board, Mr. E. F. Clarke, M.P.P., was re-elected President, and Ald. J. Knox Leslie and J. W. Lang, Esq., Vice-Presidents.

THE INSTINCT OF SUCCESS.

Every successful action in life requires a certain fixed set of motives. They are five in number: 1. A distinct object. 2. Confidence in one's ability to accomplish the desired result. 3. A sincerity of purpose. 4. A clear understanding of the relative value of things, aside from their intrinsic value. 5. An intimate acquaintance with the average conclusions of the average man —otherwise known as "human nature."

From these outlined motives spring the sub-divisions, or details of character, which we term Prudence, Perseverance, Honesty, Fidelity, Integrity, Observation, Experience, Executive Ability, Comprehension, Foresight and the like, all of which are simply the results of the general principles outlined above.

These results or definitions of character are not in themselves matters of moment, except from their connection with the governing motives which produced them.

We are, it is true, daily reminded by "men of wisdom" that these terms of character are the rungs of the ladder, which leads directly to real success.

The young man who starts out in life with the determination to forge great success from his possibilities, and depends solely upon the application of prudence, perseverance, honesty and the like for support, will no doubt meet with the approbation of his fond parents and anxious friends, but his chances of eventually securing high success in any particular line are by no means assured. These worthy and highly commendable elements of character and conduct are of great value as details, but the men who to-day command our respectful business admiration, did not build their present standing upon these conditional factors.

To practically test the matter place yourself, if possible, for a moment in the position of one of these self-made and highly successful business men.

Suppose then that you require a faithful clerk, and that "John Smith" applies for the coveted position.

If "John Smith" can prove that he is prudent, persevering and honest, and the like, and is able to attend to the details of the labor required, he will no doubt secure the position. Now, on the other hand, suppose that you require a working partner in your large and successful schemes, will a man of the caliber of "John Smith," the faithful and honest clerk, be your selection? According to a somewhat popular idea he naturally would be, but a little observation will show the contrary to be the actual result in large business life. The very burden of details which make "John Smith" invaluable as a trusted clerk rendered him unfit for the higher position.

Seemingly this proposition is in conflict with the fascinating—how facinating—story of the boy, who having faithfully run errands in a bank and refused the temptation to steal was gradually promoted to the presidency of the great institution.

Some presidents of banks and railroads, some owners of national mercantile concerns, some great manufacturers, were one and all, in their boyhood, poor and obscure, and presumably faithful to the little tedious duties which formed their daily tasks; but it was not the fact that they faithfully performed these duties which primarily led to their present high success. The real cause of their conspicuous success lies in the fact that, understanding the motives which underlie all successes, they were thereby able and willing to leave the tedious though necessary details of affairs to faithful subordinates.

In fact, one of the chief factors is their discretion in selecting men of a subordinate character who are faithful to details, thus preventing competition from within. Details are the spokes of the wheels—the support of the whole—but motive is the tire which binds them in a single group and turns them to success. The highly successful men of to-day, with rare exceptions, commenced life on an entirely different line than that in which they are now engaged. They mastered the motives of success, and then simply harnessed the opportunity to the motive and rapidly won the race.

The fact that a loved President of the United States rose to the highest office in American politics from the humble station in life found on a "tow path" is no real encouragement to those who now walk that path; it is simply the example of the result which any man may achieve, in some line, who realizes the difference between the motives of success and the details of that success. Such a man, if health permits, can no more help being highly successful in what he undertakes than can water resist the force of gravitation, which is one of the "motives" of nature.

Such a man can change from one business to another at will and while in partial personal ignorance of the details of the particular business engaged in, will make a decided success of the venture.

The instinct of success is very keen in men of his class, and an opportunity, or danger, is seen and appreciated and its relative value determined long before its passing effects are even apparent to the average man. We daily meet men who have been successful in small matters at a loss to know how to take a step further, and their unconscious ignorance of the governing motives of high success leads them to the conclusion that "luck" is a prime element of further progress, and, acting on this erroneous belief, they take a few steps "in the dark," and invariably lose what little success they have already achieved.

Other men reach a certain point of small success, and finding that they can go no further in that line, come to the conclusion that the opportunity lies in another direction, and leaving their present surety step out into a different field of labor, and by prudence, perseverance and honesty again reach a small success, only to find themselves once more blocked in their further efforts to a higher plane of success—they have simply reached their limit.

The man who understands and can apply the motives of success will succeed in any line, or, failing to secure sufficient success in that line, will be able to turn his faculties to greater use in some other line where the possibilities are wider—plenty of room at the top.

In short, the man who views the detailed results of success is the man who will succeed to a limited point—the point which determines the value of his efforts, while the man who secures high and growing success is the man who knows how to apply the general motives of success, and is thereby able to leave the working out of the details to "the other man."

If you do not wish, therefore, to be "the other man," study the motives rather than the results of business success.—D. T. Mallet in Business.

DOES IT PAY?

"Selling goods at cost," is a sign we often run across, not only in our own, but other cities. Doubtless those merchants have an idea that all customers are "blasted fools." Still it matters not to them so long as they can get a sufficient number of the "blasted fools" to give them a thriving business. No man can sell goods at cost and stay in business, and he knows it. If he sells an inferior for a superior article he is a liar, and such a man should be frowned down by every respectable man in the place.

But all merchants are not as bad as this. They want to attract trade and to do so resort to methods that are not honorable, and convey to the public a false impression, and the man who will deceive the public in business matters will do the same things with his friends, his family, his state and his country.

A merchant when he buys a lot of goods has the undoubted right to sell those goods at any price he sees fit, provided the manufacturer has not stipulated with him that he shall not sell them for less than the established retail price.

But take a case where no stipulation is made, but a well established retail price. Say it is a dollar article. The merchant advertises it for 68 cents, just what it cost him. Now, what has he gained by it? Nothing, except to deprive not only himself of profit, but his brother merchant as well. It's a dog in the manger policy.

There is business enough in the city for merchants that will give them a fair living profit, and the man that is such a consummate hog as to want it all and resort to these despicable methods to get it, wants to be forced by the other merchants combining and giving him so much of his own medicine as will make him not only sick but kill him.

Severe remedies are needed in severe cases, and this is one of the cases. Whatever article such a man puts up, drop under him two cents. The loss divided among all the combination will be trifling compared with the man's loss who first started such a foolish thing.—Ex.

About noon Saturday an alarm of fire was sounded in consequence of an outbreak being discovered in the rear of the premises occupied by Mr. Sarrasin, a grocer on Roy St. On the firemen arriving they were not a little surprised to find the flames had arisen about what was apparently an illicit still, which presented all appearance of being in full working order. The owner of the store was not to be found when enquired after. The Department of Inland Revenue was notified.

FIGURING ON SMALL MARGINS.

Manufacturers of staple goods are satisfied now with very small profits. The contracts taken for large quantities to be delivered months ahead, and in some places covering an entire year, at prices which would seem to barely realize cost, show that manufacturers are disposed to forego all chances of an upward turn in values. Offers are known to have been made by manufacturers of their entire year's output at a slight advance over cost, based upon an inspection of their books. An instance has come under our observation in which a manufacturer controlling his own raw material has offered another concern in the same line his surplus production of raw material at actual cost for a fixed time, based upon an examination of the cost sheets by a disinterested party. Concern No. 2 had been figuring on an addition to the works covering this point, but the scheme was quickly abandoned on receipt of such an offer. This condition of affairs indicates almost a revolution. Matters have been shaping for it for a long time, but only within the past few months has their full force been felt. the requirements of the country are now more than met in almost every line of production, and it will take a very heavy increase in consumption to bring the demand up to anything like the supply. Manufacturers are losing hope that this will soon occur, hence their willingness to take such contracts as are above set forth.—Iron Age.

Mr. James A. McClive who started business on Bellwoods Ave., last September, is doing well. He served his apprenticeship in Ayr and Glasgow. Natives of Ayrshire will remember the house with which he first began—Wm. Logan, the China Tea Mart.

Mr. Wm. Mackenzie has severed his connection with the Deseronto Flour Mill, and is now representing the Canadian agency of the Vacume Oil Co. Mr. Mackenzie had made himself very popular in town, and will be greatly missed among his acquaintances.

All the excellent wares made at this firm's works are grouped in their proper classes with all information necessary for business, except prices, given in detail. The illustrations are very full and clear.

Burglars are still busy in Montreal. The latest sufferers are Messrs. Murphy Bros., grocers, 509 St. James street. Thieves entered their place on Tuesday night or early Wednesday morning and forced the till open, expecting, no doubt, a goodly find, but were sold, as the money, with the exception of a few coppers, had been taken out before closing the store. As it was, all they took was a bottle of liquor.

In its supplementary number, the Winnipeg Commercial discharges well its duty to the western part of Canada in the account it gives of the material resources and economical progress of the provinces and districts beyond Lake Superior. A separate review is given of each of the leading industries and trades of that part of the country. The whole number cannot but be interesting to business men and people who wish to know more of Canada and the North-West. In interesting these it benefits the region it speaks for.

Mr. W. P. Clay, Galt, who carries on a cheese factory as well as a large retail grocery business is deeply interested in the butter question. He says the Canadian dairy butter is not as good as it was twenty-five years ago. He agrees with the opinion expressed to him recently by an old Dumfries farmer that there are too many pianos, organs and sewing machines now. The farmers' daughters are not following in the footsteps of their good old mothers, many of whom made butter that could not be beaten by the best creamery of the present day.

A South Staffordshire magistrate in convicting a Wolverhampton grocer, the other day, of an offence under the Weights and Measures Act, said it was just as great a fraud, trade custom or not for a grocer to include the paper wrapper in the weight of the article sold, in the case of sugar, as it was for a butcher to cheat his customers by putting a piece of fat under the scalepan.

Messrs. Bryson, Graham & Co., Ottawa, have added yet another business to their already mammoth establishment by buying out Messrs. S. Ashfield & Co., the crockery and glass men. It is only a short time ago since an addition was made to their premises, but their business has grown, and is growing so fast that it became absolutely needful to take in more accommodation and this was met by the purchase mentioned. In retiring Messrs. Ashfield & Co. are naturally thankful for that liberal patronage which enabled them to attain such a high degree of prosperity and feel that they are not stating too much in saying that Bryson, Grayham & Co.'s well known enterprise will fully maintain, may even exceed, any efforts of theirs to make it the popular crockery mart of the city.

Our esteemed contemporary LePrix Courant has the following hearty and ungrudging words to say of us in its last issue: We have received the very welcome visit at our office of Messrs. G. Hector Clemes and A. J. Ritchie, who represent the J. B. McLean Publishing Co., of Toronto, that is to say the house which publishes THE CANADIAN GROCER, HARDWARE, BOOKS AND NOTIONS and THE DRY GOODS REVIEW, four special journals which ought to be familar to our readers. Mr. Clemes, who is the traveller of the company, is visiting at this moment Montreal and the provinces, and we hope that he will be well received by our friends. It is indisputable that the journals which he represents are at the head of publications of this class in Ontario: THE CANADIAN GROCER above all having a considerable circulation in all parts of the country.

The joint committee of the Hamilton Ministerial Association, Women's Christian Association, and Women's Christian Temperance Union, co-operating in the matter of early closing, met on Saturday afternoon in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. Ald. Mould reported that his committee had not succeeded in getting much encouragement from the grocers. They did not think the reform would be practicable in his business while so many of their customers continued to send in their orders late on Saturday night. The report from the ladies' committee, after visiting the dry goods houses, was much more encouraging, as a large majority of the dry goods men were quite ready to fall in with the change, provided it was made binding on all. In accordance with this statement the ladies' committee were asked to circulate a petition to the Council for such a by-law as the Ontario statute provided for, in the department of dry goods, clothing, gentlemen's furnishings, boots and shoes, and merchant tailors, the hour named being nine o'clock. Many of the storekeepers would have preferred an earlier hour, but to secure the widest concurrence the latter hour was agreed upon. It was also agreed that a communication on the subject should be addressed to the Retail Grocers' Association.

MONEY-MAKING -- MONEY-SAVING

Some men have the money-getting, others the money-saving faculty; few have both. Those endowed with the former in its plentitude, and who exercise it to the utmost, often become rich while indulging in all expensive luxuries which sumptuous taste can suggest; but the colossal figures of finance, the giant "bank-note world," by whose side the half-million and million fellows are merely respectable dwarfs, are generally rigid economists in their personal expenditures, and some people are discourteous enough to call them "screws."

Upon the whole, it is much easier tomake money than to save, and although we would not advise any to be miserly, it is certain the part of wisdom and prudence to set aside a considerable portion of a large income as a provision for the future, and so to invest this reserve fund so as to place it, if possible, beyond the reach of all the ordinary contingencies of business. It is a pleasant thing, during one of these financial cyclones which every now and then make shipwreck of innumerable fortunes, to feel that one has an anchor to windward that will not drag. Therefore, while you are making money, save it; and as you save it, put it where no momentary convulsion can bring your "nobles to ninepence."—Ex.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, Feb. 25, 1892.

GROCERIES.

Measured by the activity in the shipping departments of the houses along the street, the work of the travellers does not show up very imposingly. They are doing their best, however, and have all the advantage that easy prices can give them. But wants are slow to unfold. Grocers limit their purchases to the capacity of just the passing needs. That is one of the effects of the shorter terms that have held for the past year and more. Prices are offset by terms. Traders are almost forced to buy often rather than in large quantities. Hence there is not such feverish eagerness as there used to be to get goods when they are low. This tends to prolong and deepen the general dulness of trade, however, and the trader is benefited by the slowness of recovery which non-speculative buying causes. There would moreover be more buying, if the trade did not generally depend upon the dulness lasting and the depression sinking further. Sugar is being left alone to some extent because it is expected that prices will be manipulated as much as ever for the purpose of catching general business. There has been less buying of dried fruit than in the corresponding part of former years, and for this low prices are to blame. Tea is fairly active. Canned goods are in as good demand as they usually are at this season. Payments are fairly satisfactory.

CANNED GOODS.

The steady regular demand for corn, peas, and tomatoes keeps up. A decidedly upward cast in prices does not bring forth orders more freely than when quotations were lower and easier. The value of the goods becomes more strongly confirmed with the close of each week. The moderateness of retail prices, and the staple character of the stock are bringing canned vegetables out of the class of quasi luxuries into that of necessaries, thereby enlarging the consumptive demand. This makes a comparison of the quality of the past year's and of the previous year's pack an unsatisfactory basis upon which to calculate. Whether the pack of '91 was equal to, greater than or less than the pack of '90 is not the question; the question is, is it equal to the demand that the increased consumptive power of '91-'92 can maintain? Just now vegetables are firm in round assorted lots at $1.05 to $1.10. There is some slight activity in fruits, which have not figured largely in trade up to the present. Bartlett pears quote at $1.75, sugar pears at $1.50. Damson blue plums are $1.65 to $1.90. In canned salmon and lobster the volume of business is small. It is expected to pick up somewhat after the opening of Lent. Crown lobster is easier at $2.25. Sardines are also becoming more interesting as Lent approaches.

COFFEE.

The business in coffee has not developed or declined, but continues at the quiet rate that it has kept throughout the past part of the year. No notable transactions are to be reported. Prices are firmer in Rios but no higher. Fine grades do not abound. Rios are from 18c. up, Mochas and Javas from 27c. up.

DRIED FRUIT.

The one line that is firm in price is prunes. Importations have been unusually light. In other years a much larger stock has been got into store by the middle of February than has yet come to hand. Nor did exporters' agents here do so large a business for delivery at any time as they commonly do. The demand on German and North European, as well as English account was very large. That made up for the decline in the United States demand. In England it was expected that dried and evaporated apples would displace prunes to a greater extent than they now promise to do. Casks are unchanged at 5 to 5¼c., and cases at 6¼ to 7½c., according to grade. The bulk of the stock is of the Sphinx brand. Valencia raisins are very dull from 5c. up for off-stalk. Currants are steady and unchanged at from 5½c. up.

NUTS.

Prices Current give about all the information to be gleaned just now from the nut market. Nuts are in stock and for sale, but the buyers' except for confectioners' and fancy bakers' purposes, are few and never want large quantities.

RICE AND SPICES.

A very small trade is all that is done in rice. Prices are steady from 3⅞c. up. All spices are very quiet.

SUGAR.

The lowering of the price of granulated certainly did not cause any headlong precipitation in the demand. It seemed to be taken for granted that as the jobbers were so anxious to get prices down they might be trusted to keep them there, so that no haste would be necessary for retailers to get the full benefit of the reduction. Granulated sugar is offered freely at 4½c., but does not go freely, that is to say, it is not in wide request for wants beyond those of the present. Though jobbers do not speak of the sugar trade as a desirable one in the present circumstances, and say what appears to be true enough—that the less of it there is done the better, reports of offers made below 4½c. are well authenticated, a car load of granulated at 4.35 having been offered since our last report. Nor is there entire unanimity among wholesalers to make a larger profit on yellows than they did, in order to counterbalance the loss of profit on granulated. While the majority do not quote below 3⅝c., there are some quoting at 3.55c. The latter do not feel disposed to co-operated with those who were most urgent for the suspension of the list, and reason that it is as well that the fullest use should be made of the freedom which that step secured. This means that the balance of profit is not to be redressed by an addition to the price that was paid for yellow before the list was given up. The intrinsic position of sugar is far from weak however, as the value of raw is still ruled by the belief that the yield will be on the short side. The plan of selling yellow along with granulated is now being varied by houses who sell tea along with granulated. A trader who takes a certain proportion of tea along with his granulated, can now get the latter at 4¼c.

Willet & Gray's Sugar Trade Journal New York, says:

Raws—The same conditions noted last week remained during the present week. Refiners accepted all offerings on the basis of quotations, but declined all offers at any advance. An advance in raws is no doubt hindered and delayed by the unsatisfactory condition of the refined market, which is caused by overproduction. But as this overproduction is cutting at a rapid rate into the Cuba crop, which is the only West India crop available, the sugar position has a great deal more strength in it than appears on the surface. It is quite possible that before April 15 the excess of the Cuba crop, even on the highest estimates made, will have passed into the United States. The crops of other West Indies are late and only beginning to be available for March shipment. They are all reported in excellent condition and prospects. While it is quite certain that we will need, say 100,000 tons from Europe, yet the disposition of the West India planters to be satisfied with fair profits, and the absence of all speculation on this side, will tend to keep our sources of supply at a lower parity than Europe, except at occasional periods, at which times portions of our requirements from Europe will come forward. The parity of the United States and United Kingdom markets is coming more closely together, judging from the offerings of some Javas of 97° test, at a cost of 3.52c against 3.44c for centrifugals 96°. Muscovado sugars are extremely scarce and much wanted by refiners, but there will be few available until next month.

Cuba—Many persons still look for 900,000 tons crop in Cuba, but in partial confirmation of our lower estimates it is reported that some "centrals" have lost valuable time in idleness by the lack of transportation facilities for the cane from long distances by railways, and receipts at shipping points are behind last year's. The exports in January from six principal ports were 60,316 tons, against 34,320 tons in January, 1891, and stocks on February 1, in some ports, were 59,790 tons, against 92,556 tons February 1, 1891.

Latest notable facts affecting sugar—Stocks in all the principal countries 13,127 tons more than last year. About 200,000 tons less sugar available from the beet sugar countries. Cuba crop 25,000 to 50,000 tons in excess of last year. West India crops all larger than last year's, but later. A refined sugar market that gives no profit to refiners. Our deductions are that the situation is favorable for an advance of ⅛ to ¼c. in refined, without any change in raws, and that eventually raws will advance also.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.

Some demand has cropped up for syrups, the very low prices of which could not fail to develop business. The trade is still limited however. Grades at about 2¼c. per lb. are in fair request, and cheaper descriptions are also selling.

Molasses is inactive. Prices are unchanged from 35c. up for West Indian, and from 30c. up for New Orleans.

TEAS.

A satisfactory demand continues to be heard from the retailers, whose orders for small parcels come forward quite as well as they did a week ago. Mediums are preferred, and the invoices from 18 to 28c. preponderate. Supplies held here are still large, and prices show no upward tendency.

There has been more enquiry for Indian teas during the past week than for some time past. From London there has not been much of interest to chronicle during the week. The sales have gone off steadily, and no quotable change in prices has taken place since last week. Common, undesirable teas, of which a good many have been offered, have been sold at about previous ruling rates. Fine teas with point or thickness continue to receive attention, and some good liquoring Darjeelings have met with keen competition, and realized full prices. A rather quiet feeling has prevailed this week on the whole, and reports from the country point to business being a little duller.

PETROLEUM

The volume of trade is smaller than that of a week ago. Prices are steady at from 15c. up.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports: Petrolia crude $1.29 per bbl.: Oil Springs crude $1.29½. The oil market has continued to attract little or no particular attention to either buyers or sellers the past week, with the exception of a few odd dealers in crude oil at the same figure as last quotation, $1.29. There seems at present also no external force at work and prices sag along at about the above mentioned figure. The refined oil market is in a pretty bad state and to make the position, if it were possible, worse, it is on the cards that another refinery will be built at Oil Springs. There has been a feeling on the part of the larger refiners to cut prices to as fine a figure as possible.

MARKET NOTES.

Messrs. F. F. Dalley & Co. have added one more size, No. 5, to their Spanish Blacking. It sells at $8 per gross. They have also changed the box in which their celebrated blacking is put up, the new package being a particularly handsome one.

Downward the course of starch quotations take their way. Last week's Prices Current showed the reductions made by the St. Lawrence and the Edwardsburg Companies. This week's show the reduction made by the British America Starch Co. Every move on the one side evokes a responsive throb on the other. Just now the trade and cash discounts of the British America Co. are 15 per cent. on 10 box lots, and 17½ per cent. on 40 box lots. The other two companies give a trade discount of 10 per cent., and a cash discount of 3 per cent. on lots of one box and upwards. The probability is that the Edwardsburg Co. and the St. Lawrence Co. will soon make another change. Wants are still kept well in hand by the trade, as there is a chance of lower prices.

The Best Grocers Make a point of Keeping it always in Stock.

of large rolls come forward more freely than they did a week ago. They are worth from 17 to 19c. as a rule, though there are qualities which have to be sold for less. Choice dairy tubs are worth as high as 21c., ranging from that down to 19c. They are still in very meagre supply, while the demand keeps up both for better volume and quality than are yet coming in. Medium tubs are good property these days, 15 to 17c. being easily obtained for as many as offer. Low grades are in better request on account of the stiffness of lard. They appear to find outlet eastward through other mediums than this market. Creamery is slower of sale from 20 to 24c.

Cheese jobs out at 12 to 12½c., and in round lots does not sell below 11½c. There is summer cheese in stock at 9½ to 10½c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES—Good stock brings $2 to $2.50. The demand is active. Buyers are still picking up lots for the British market.

BEANS—The price has declined to $1 and $1.15 for cars, which are more freely offered and less readily sold than they were when prices were higher. Out of store lots are $1.20 to $1.35.

CRANBERRIES—The demand from this out is not apt to be brisk, so that the dulness is not likely to be dispelled. Prices are $6 to $7. Softer weather is telling on prices and will soon tell on the fruit.

DRIED APPLES—The market has little spirit in it. Prices are 4 to 4¼c. for round lots, and 4½ to 4¾c. for ordinary parcels.

EVAPORATED APPLES — Prices do not show signs of easing but the market is dull. A few sales at from 7½ to 8½c. are reported.

EGGS—Easier prices are following heavier receipts. Fresh eggs quote at 19 to 20c., with a rapidly diminishing probability that even these figures will hold for more than a few days. Warmer weather favors production.

HIDES—The market is sluggish. Green are quiet at 4½c. for No. 1 cows'. Cured are steady at 5c.

HONEY—The prices do not fluctuate, a steady basis of dulness underlying the market. Extracted is 8 to 10c., sections are 14 to 16c.

HOPS—No revival in the demand has taken place, though holders continue sanguine as to the value of their stock. The range is 17 to 24c. Quality and quantity modify the difference between these extremes.

ONIONS—The price has stiffened since last week. Barrels are $2.50 to $3.

POTATOES—It takes good potatoes to bring 35c. by the carload. Out of store prices are 45 to 50c.

SEEDS—Though the usual export trade of the season has all but closed, there is some probability that more activity will spring up in consequence of higher prices in the United States. Trade is quiet yet, neither buyers nor sellers manifesting much interest in the market. Alsike is $5.50 to $6.50, red clover $5.50 to $5.75, timothy $1.25 to $1.50.

SKINS—Good sheepskins are $1.15 to $1.25. Calfskins are rather dull at 5 to 7c.

TALLOW—Refined is 5½ to 6c., rough 2c.

WOOL—The price and condition of the market are unchanged, 18c. being paid reluctantly.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

The price of hogs has eased. A few cars have been bought outside at $6, with 11c. and in some cases 13c. freight, making the price $6.11 to $6.13 laid down here. The offerings were light throughout the week. Products continue firm.

BACON—Long clear is now mostly 8c., though for round lots 7¾c. still holds. In smoked bacon, heavy bellies are 10c., medium are 10½c., and boneless are 11c. Backs are 10c. Rolls are 8¾c.

HAMS—New smoked are 10½ to 11c. with increasing strength. Pickled are a cent lower.

LARD—All holders are now asking 10c. for both pails and tubs, as the supply is not excessive and the demand is good.

BARREL PORK—The price of old United States mess is steady at $13.50 to $14, and new Canadian is $15. Short cut is $16 to $16.50.

FRESH MEATS—The supply increases as Lent, the period of limited consumption, approaches. For beef the prices are, forequarters 4½ to 8½c., hindquarters 7½ to 8c.; lamb is 8 to 9c., mutton 7 to 8c., veal 8 to 9½c.

GREEN FRUIT.

Lemons are selling well, the weather favoring shipping, and the prevalence of colds and the grip, though greatly moderated, maintaining the consumption unusually well for the time of year. Though some stock was chilled on its way from the primary market north, little of it reached here, the bulk of the arrivals being in good condition. The prices are $3.50 to $4.50 for Palermos and Messinas. Oranges are fairly active. Floridas are somewhat wasty still. They are $2.65 to $3.25. Valencias are $3.75 in round lots, and $4 to $4 25 in smaller parcels. Bananas are $1.50 to $3. Pineapples are $3 per doz.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

The inward movement in fish has been good during the past week, and a considerable stock of herring and other sea fish has been accumulated in anticipation of the increased Lenten demand. Prices are firm and the tendency will undoubtedly be towards a rise, but it may not take place for a week or even two weeks. Oysters are not so brisk as usual, but a considerable trade is being done, at steady prices.

SALT.

The uncertain weather has seemed to cause an increased demand for salt, and six carloads, including two of barrels, have been sold here. Prices remain firm but stocks are small. The trade in small quantities has been very fair at steady prices.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, Feb. 25, 1892.

The wholesale trade here report business quiet, and travellers are not doing as well as expected. The feature of the week has been the dissolution of the Wholesale Guild owing to causes referred to in our last issue, this is likely to lead to some lively developments because the majority of the wholesale grocery trade now that they have a free hand, are determined to make the kickers sick. The first move has already been taken in this direction by a cut on granulated of ⅛ of a cent per pound, and it is the avowed inten-

FLOUR AND FEED.

TORONTO.

A better feeling in the flour market had been aroused by an advance in the price of raw material, and some business succeeded, but the demand flagged again, inquiries taking the place of orders, and the inquiries were below millers' prices. Hence the market has sagged back again into its former sluggish state. Millers are not weakened in their views of the value of their product, and the inquiries do not depress prices. Feeds are quiet and generally featureless.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $5.20; strong bakers', $4.85; Ontario patents, $4.40; straight roller, $4.75; extra, $4.10 to $4.15: low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.15 to $5.20; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.75 to $4.85; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90; straight roller, $3.95 to $4.00; extra, $3.80 to $3.85; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL—Oatmeal is quiet at $3.80, which includes granulated, rolled, and rolled oats. Cornmeal is $3.80 to $4.

BUCKWHEAT FLOUR—is steady at $4.50 per barrel.

FEED—Bran is easier at $14 to $15, shorts at $15 to $16, mixed feed is unchanged at $23 to $25, cracked corn $1.20, feeding corn 50 to 52c., oats 33 to 33½c.

HAY—A better demand exists, but the price is unchanged at $11.50 to $12 for No. 1 timothy, and $10 to $10.50 for mixed.

STRAW—is quieter at $6 to $6.50.

MONTREAL.

The flour market has shown some improvement during the week, and holders speak more hopefully under the influence of some export enquiries and demand from outside points around here. Business for export has resulted aggregating 15,000 sacks high and low grades, mostly on Glasgow account, while some fair business has been in patents and strong bakers' for home account. We quote: Patent spring, $5 to $5.20; Patent winter, $5 to $5.10; straight roller, $4.50 to $4.65; extra, $4 20 to $4.25; superfine, $4 to $4.10; city strong bakers', $5; strong bakers', $4.75 to $4.90.

The demand for oatmeal is small, the market ruling dull and easy at unchanged prices. The stocks in store show a decrease of 34 barrels compared with a year ago, and an increase of 2,889 barrels compared with a year ago. Standard, per bag, $2.10 to $2.20; granulated, $2.10 to $2.20; rolled, $2.10 to $2.20.

Feed is quiet and without change. We quote bran $16 to $17: shorts, $18 to $19, and mouillie $25.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

Flour seems to have touched bottom prices, as the last few days the market has stiffened some, and seems likely to hold firm, it is quoted from 10 to 15c. per bbl. higher than last week.

The millers here, who claim to have been selling cornmeal at a loss for some time, have combined to regulate the price which is now about 10c. per bbl. higher than last quoted, and as corn is higher we do not look for lower prices, $2.85 to $2.95 are the selling figures.

Oatmeal is without change either in price or quantity.

tion of the trade to meet every reduction of the kicking firm by a still greater one. Other lines show no feature worthy of special comment.

SUGAR.

Since our last there has been some interesting developments in sugar just as we predicted. As everyone expected the combine has dissolved for the time being and it is now a case of war to the knife with the firm who kicked in the first place. From all accounts we are going to have a pretty lively time of it for every wholesale firm in the city say they are going to make them sick or know the reason why. In fact the battle has already commenced for granulated is selling at 4⅜c by all the firms except the single firm who first left the combine and it is the avowed intention of the majority to meet every cut of theirs with a further one. It will be seen therefore that the indications point to a very lively time on granulated. No change in yellows is anticipated which rule as before and it is unlikely that the fight will touch that grade at all. We quote the old basis of 3½ to 4½c according to grade the outside basis for bright stock.

MOLASSES AND SYRUPS.

Syrups and molasses are still dull and unchanged in price. Barbadoes bring 35c., while the American product sells at 27 to 28c. Syrups are quoted at 25 to 28c. ; for medium bright 30 to 35c ; for choice amber 40 to 45c.

TEAS.

There has been quite a little excitement in the tea market during the last few days, especially in connection with Japans the stock in all grades being pretty well picked up. Japans worth 20c. and upward are in good demand, and there is a good enquiry for Indian and Ceylon teas.

COFFEES.

There is nothing new in coffees since our last. Prices rule firm with some fair turnovers on a basis of 18 to 20c. in Rios and Jamaicas.

RICE.

Rice remains quiet and dull, and in the absence of business, prices are nominal.

DRIED FRUIT.

The dried fruit market has shown more activity and values as a consequence are steadier. Prime Valencia raisins are moving at 5c., and 4¾c. is now the inside figure for business, some under grade stock moving at that price. Currants are in better demand this week and there is a good trade doing at 5 to 5½c. Prunes have a fair jobbing movement at 5½ to 6c.for Bosnais. Figs are steady and unchanged at 10c., and dates at 5c. We quote prime Valencias 5c.; currants at 5 to 5½c. for Patras, and 6 to 7c. for Vostizzas in cases; Bosnia prunes, 5½ to 6c.; figs 10c.; and dates 5c. per lb.

NUTS.

Nuts remain the same as noted last week with a fair jobbing business. We quote :—Almonds Tarragona 14 to 15c.; Almonds, Ivica 14 to 15c.; Almonds, common 10 to 11c.; Almonds, hardshell 07 to 08c.; Walnuts, Grenoble, new 12 to 12½c.; Walnuts, French 10 to 10½c.; Cocoanuts per 100 $4.50 to $5 ; Filberts 9 to 10c.; Pecans 16 to 17c.; Peanuts 07 to 10c.

CANNED GOODS.

There is nothing doing in canned goods outside a small jobbing trade. The only thing in which there is an actual scarcity is peas. Tomatoes are plentiful. One dealer has tried in vain to place 2,000 cases at $1, but did not succeed. Dealers say that advices from the west, state that stocks are heavy. The prospects are, that the field of packers will be smaller next year and a correspondingly smaller pack. In this case, the surplus of 1891 pack may prove good stock.

GREEN FRUIT.

In green fruit there is a quiet business doing on the basis quoted a week ago, and there is no special feature to note. We quote Valencia oranges at $3.50 to $3.75 ; Floridas $2.75 to $3.25, and bitter $3.50 to $4. Lemons $2.50 to $3.

APPLES.

There is no change in apples which job out quietly at unchanged prices. We quote $2.50 to $3.00. A considerable quantity of stock was damaged by the fire recently in Chisholms warehouse, this no doubt will be diposed of at some concession. Dried and evaporated remain unchanged at 5 to 6c. for the former and 8 to 9c. for the latter.

HOPS.

There is nothing doing in hops, the stocks on spot are much larger than they were, as growers have been sending in their holdings more freely. This however had no effect on prices for the goods are held as high as ever, and as the brewers claim to be well supplied there is nothing to induce business. Pressed hops remain steady at 16c. with a fair jobbing trade.

FISH.

In fish trade is still disappointing, and although there has been some call in the west for some staple lines the improvement is not marked. We quote : Herring, No. 1, per bbl., $5.25 to $5.30; lake trout, per half bbl., $4.25 to $4.50; sea trout, per bbl., $9.00 to $9.50; codfish, green, No. 1, per bbl., $5 to $5.25; do. No. 2, per bbl., $4.50 to $4.75; codfish, dried, per bbl., $5 to $5.05; salmon, B.C., per bbl., $13 to $13.50; do., Nfld., No. 1, per tee, $22.50 to $23; do. do., No. 2, per tee, $21 to $21.50; do. do., No. 3, per tee, $20 to $20.50.

PROVISIONS.

The local provisions have been dull but steady. Pork continues in small supply, which has restricted business, for the demand has been fair. Lard and smoked meats are without change. We quote :—Canadian short cut, per brl. $16.50 to $17.00; mess pork, western, per brl. $16.00 to $16.50; short cut, western, per brl. $17 to $17.25; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c ; bacon per lb. 9c. to 10c ; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¼ to 8c.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The season is practically over in cheese, and there is nothing to note, except that some 8,000 to 9,000 boxes were moved last week at 11¾ to 12c. This practically cleans out stocks here, and it is doubtful if an order for a couple thousand boxes strictly finest could now be filled.

Butter jobs along quietly, the only change being somewhat freer offerings of creamery but there is quotable alterations. We quote: Finest creamery 24 to 24½c.; finest Townships 18 to 20c.; Morrisburg and Brockville 18 to 19c.; finest Western 16½ to 17½c.

EGGS.

The egg market is quiet. Montreal limed are steady at 14 to 15c., but there is a considerable quantity of discolored stock which went through the late fire,offering at 11 to 12c. The eastern American hold up well to the great advantage of this market, as many of the western eggs now going to New York and Boston would under ordinary circumstances come to Montreal to compete with local stocks. Shipments are still being made from here to Boston.

GRAIN.

The grain market was dull and uninteresting to-day. The stocks in store show a decrease of 11,958 wheat, 10,776 peas, and an increase of 23,184 oats, 9,258 barley and 1,241 rye compared with a week ago. Compared with a year ago there is an increase of 129,230 wheat, 196,684 peas, 21,489 barley, and a decrease of 10,733 corn, and 1,931 rye. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04; peas, 73 to 74c. per 66 pounds; oats, 32c. to 34c. per 34 pounds ; corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 45 to 46c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

HALIFAX MARKET QUOTATIONS.

(Wholesale Selling Rates.)

HALIFAX, Feb. 24, 1892.

BREADSTUFFS—Markets are a little better. The English markets are improving and so are the Canadian. Cornmeal is a little lower.

Manitoba highest grade patents, $5.75 to 6.00; High grade patents, $5.10 to 5.20; Good 90 per cent Patents, $4.90 to 5.00; Straight grade, $0.00 to 4.80; Good seconds, $0.00 to 4.40; Graham flour, $4.60 to 4.75; Oatmeal, $4.35 to 4.40; Rolled wheat, $5.55; Wheat bran per ton, $20.00 to $21.00; Middlings, $00.00 to $23.50; Shorts, $00.00 to $22.50.; Moulee, $24.00 to $28.50; Split Peas $0.00 to $4.10; White beans per bushel, $1.50 to 1.53; Pot Barley per bbl, $3.90 to $4.50; Canadian oats, choice quality, 43c. to 45c.; P. E. I. oats 41 to 45c; Hay, $13 to $14.

SUGAR—Business in the local market continues disappointingly dull, the demand being entirely of a jobbing character and slow at that.

Cut loaf, 5⅝c.; Granulated, 4½. to 4¾c; Circle A, 4½c.; White extra C, 4⅜c.; Standard, 3⅝c. to 3¾c; Extra Yellow C, 3½c.; Yellow C, 3½ to 3⅝c.

MOLASSES.—Barbados 35c.; Demerara 35 to 38c. · Diamond N. 48c.; Porto Rico 34 to 35c.; Trinidad 33 to 34c.; Antigua 33 to 34c.

FISH—It is very difficult to say anything about fish in the present dull and lifeless state of trade. There has not been a single feature of interest developed for many weeks, and even the near approach of Lent promises no increase of liveliness, as it is expected that the prevalence of "la grippe" will bring about a relaxation of the rules that usually govern that period so that a fish diet will not be the necessity that it usually is.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N.B., Feb. 24, 1892.

The slight improvement noticed last week did not broaden out as much as was hoped for, and as the snow is rapidly dissapearing cannot look for much expansion of trade for several weeks.

BUTTER—still continues scarce. Nice lots are readily disposed off. The price is about the same as last quoted.

EGGS—are in better demand for strictly fresh, with prices steady at 16 to 18c.

CHEESE—the market seems quite bare of cheese as only a few dealers have any stock and they are asking 12c.

CANNED GOODS—are not moving as freely as holders would wish for, as all the retailers are pretty well stocked.

THE MODERN COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER.

The Sample Case gives the following extracts from a sermon delivered before the C. T. A., at Hutchinson, Kansas, by the Rev. A. F. Irwin, last month, and is well worth a a careful persusal:

"He is a comparatively modern invention, differing in many respects and to his advantage, from the old-time itinerant merchant. He is an outgrowth of the strong competition of modern commercial life. Some one has said that our modern inventions are simply the enlarging or elongating our common faculties or organs. The telegraph is the extension of the fingers by nerves of wire, so that we write 100, 500, or 5,000 miles away from us. The telephone is the extension of our voice tones to somebody's ears so as to eliminate space. The bicyle is the lengthening of the legs so that we step ten feet instead of two.

The telescope stretches our vision from five miles to five million miles. And the great modern army of travelling men extend the office of the various firms, corporations, mercantile and manufacturing establishments represented, beyond the confines of some dark, dingy, mysterious corner in a great brick building, to the counter of every customer, bringing the brain, the heart, the social atmosphere of the office into vital touch with the personal of every customer.

The jobber is able at once to communicate with a great many distributors. The social influence of the office is carried everywhere, and the character and business methods of its customers observed by keen, practical business men.

The position of the commercial traveller holds between the jobber and the customer requires rare qualifications and peculiar tact. He often represents large interests. In the closest competition he speaks, thinks and acts for the home office. In emergencies he decides for it. He signs contracts that bind it and makes promises which it keeps inviolate. Socially he makes friends for his house, or repels men from it. The office may employ untried or irresponsible men at the desk, or behind the counter, where they can be supervised, but not upon the road without great risk. A machine can work in the house where it can be regulated, but not for the house. He who takes the road to success must be a man, in the highest sense a man, Manly, generous, sociable, shrewd and reliable. I am glad that the travelling man has set a high standard for his own profession. One of our own papers, The Sample Case, in an article on "The Science of Salesmanship," emphasizes the following as the important qualifications:

1. Brain, viz., a good, healthy, well-balanced brain.

2. Moral, viz., moral character and force.

It requires brains, good and quick judgment, and all this in a constitution of healthy, happy temperament.

There must not only be a comprehensive knowledge of the line of goods handled, and those kindred to them, but there must be also a keen, ready insight into human nature. There are no two men alike. One is jovial and hearty, another is quiet and dignified, and must be handled very respectfully and with circumspection; a third likes to chat and can not not be hurried, while his neighbor is nervous and quick and anxious to get through.

Here is one who waits for the social cigar or drink before he talks business, and another who would consider such a proposition an insult. These things the travelling man must read as by iustinct. Quick and accurate must be his judgment of men. The other qualification is moral. For permanent success there is nothing more important than true, manly sincerity. He deals with sharp, shrewd business men who are accomplished in detecting counterfeits, and recognize and appreciate the ring of a genuine man. This moral quality must not be assumed, but real. When the buyer is assured that he deals with a true man who is above artifice and low trickery, who deals in candor and honesty, he will appreciate both the man and the firm he represents. A yielding to anything irregular or dishonest in order to secure a large order, even though it be suggested and encouraged by an unscrupulous buyer, will only secure temporary success, and will be a permanent detriment both to the salesman and the house he represents.

The first qualification—brains—makes the successful and brilliant commercial traveller; add to this the second qualification—a good moral character—and you have the travelling man who wears, and whose commercial value to his house is increased the longer he remains upon a route.

The reputation that a man thus makes is his business capital and it has a high commercial value in the market.

We find, therefore, that the successful commercial traveller has the traits of character, mental, moral and social, that will secure his success in this life. He will be able to look out for himself here, but the Apostle James makes bold to intimate that he may be tempted to forget or under-estimate the life to come. A young man came to Jesus. He was influential, successful, moral, and was asked for a policy that would ensure him eternal life when he died. Jesus says to him: "One thing thou lackest." He was unwilling to follow Christ. He wanted his own way more than eternal life, and he went away with a deeper shadow than ever upon him. Even the ideal man needs the forgiveness of God, the religion of Jesus, the Christ, to round out his life and perfect it.

PURE WISDOM.

The Collector assorts and labels the following nuggets:

You might as well expect to catch a basket of fish with one worm as to expect great results from a single trial advertisement.—Confucius.

It is not the lawyer who talks the loudest that oftenest gets frosting on his cake.—Aristotle.

Many lawyers who "do not handle collections" would like to do so if they could. At least, they look as much.—Ramesus II.

Don't make the mistake of thinking that "there is plenty of room at the top" when it is a case of plenty of rum at the top, so far as you are concerned.—Solomon.

Don't think that because I fiddled when Rome was burning that you can whittle, play

"seven up," and run for office, and keep up a good paying law business all at the same time.—Nero

Don't monkey with the judge or get funny with the jury. Both are loaded,—Dante.

The wind bloweth where it listeth, but no matter that don't give you the privilege.—St. Patrick.

If any part of a lawyer's work in your estimation is "dirty work"—collecting for instance—quit it. No man ever handled dirt for any leangth of time but come away spotted.—Alexander Severus.

Don't ever try to answer the questions which you answered when you were admitted to the bar. It will only show how high and out of reach your brains roost, and how much a man may forget and yet be allowed to live.—Agamemnon.

In 1376 Jack Cade's men beheaded all the lawyers they could find. History repeats itself. No telling when it may occur again.—Herr Most.

"Was not all the knowledge of the Egyptians writ in mystic symbols?" Unquestionably, but that is no excuse for a lawyer writing "see the pale martyr in a sheet of fire" with such a poor scrawl that it was read "see the pale martyr with his shirt on fire." There ought to be a limit to this thing.—Jerry Simpson.

A STORY OF GREELEY'S OFFICE BOY

Amos Cummings tells how a faithful body guard of Horace Greeley once kept Vice-President Wilson out of his room. The story, after detailing how several New York politicians were disposed of, continues:

"A few minutes later Vice-President Wilson came in. He had been travelling a good deal, and his form was covered with the grimiest linen duster I ever saw. He slammed down his old carpet bag on the floor and said, 'I want to see Mr. Greeley.'

"'Git out!' thundered Ben, 'the old man's busy.'

"'Well, can't you take my name? asked the vice-president.

"'I guess I'll have to do it; but you stand right here and don't move or you'll ketch it.'

"Ben went into Greeley's room, and I heard a hot dialogue going on for a little while, then the office boy reappeared and looked at Wilson with supreme digust.

"'Jest as I thought; he don't want to see you,' declared Ben. 'Now, git out.'

"I pacified Ben and he went in to tell Mr. Greeley who wanted to see him. The great editor listened to what I had to say and then shouted: 'Tell the vice-president to walk right in. The fool of a boy said that there was an old bum named Wilson loafing around outside who wanted to see me."—Washington Post.

SOMETHING FOR NOTHING.

Ever since Cleopatra shocked the ancient world by dissolving that pearl—which was certainly hers to do with what she liked—says Mabel S. Clarke, in the Boston Globe, the eyes of even school children have dilated with horror at the thought of such extravagance. Sheer waste and no return! In these days some enterprising showman could exhibit the wonderful and unique solution and make a fortune from it.

What if that rich old Roman did adorn the fish in his pond with ear rings? Surely any satisfaction he may have obtained was sufficient income? But no! the modern, and particularly the American, speculator, demands a return, and that substantial, for every outlay. "With what measure ye mete it shall be measured to you" is a law thoroughly appreciated, and persistently applied.

Just as some good American citizens feel quite proud of an infraction of their country's laws, as in smuggling, so the majority of mankind delight in infringing the above named moral law by receiving that for which they give inadequate return or none at all. Their version or perversion of the law runs: "Let us have measured unto us more than we mete to others." In other words, "Let us do our best to get something for nothing."

The desire runs throughout life from boyhood to manhood. It begins with playing for "keeps," and does not end when the man has obtained the much sought office reputed to be a sinecure.

The small boy enjoys the collecting of business cards, his father setting him the example in the row of calendars that adorn his desk. If any payment were required the boy's collection would be of the smallest, and the father would find that one calendar would answer his purpose quite well enough.

Why do the advertising pages of the Sunday papers receive equel attention with those of purely literary character? What is it that crowds the shops of a Monday morning, so that one endangers life and limb in purchasing a handkerchief? Bargains, to be sure; and those which purport to offer the maximum value for the minimum price are the most sought.

"Fire and smoke" sales, the dubious charm of lotteries and the fascinating uncertainty in the purchase of unclaimed and unopened express packages that may contain goods worth many times the price paid—these all come in the same category.

A huckster passed through one of Boston's streets last week shouting, in tones of Tamango-like power, if not sweetness: "Orrnges! Orrn-ges! Fifteen fra quatr!" A half dozen of the golden globes rolled off the wagon, noticed, if at all, only by the dejected horse, who appreciated the loss of even a few ounces of his burden. The stray oranges were not very large or attractive, especially after they were daubed with splashes of mud. But, unprepossessing as they were, they had the charm of cheapness to a lady who spied them from a window. As the waggon turned the corner sallied forth and filled her basket, smiling complacently the while, because she had obtained "something for nothing."

Free lectures and free concerts, not to mention free lunches, are always well patronized. No matter if a man knows that they are not so free as they seem, the fascination is upon him and he yields. The spirit of freedom has mastered him, as it filled our fathers in '76!—New England Grocer.

An Easy Way to Make 150 Dollars.

In order to make the merits of "BARM" Yeast more widely known, and place it speedily on the market, we offer the following prizes in

SOLID CASH

1st. 150 Dollars to the first wholesale traveller who sells 500 boxes.
2nd. 100 " " second " " " " "
3rd. 50 " " third " " " " "
4th. 10 " to every traveller who sells 100 boxes during March and April.

NOTE.—These boxes must be sold in the regular way to your retail customers.

This money should be easily earned for the following reasons :

1st—The Yeast is put up in 50 cent boxes, containing 2 dozen of the largest 5 cent packages on the market. You have therefore only to sell 250 dollars worth to get the prize.

2nd—The retailer makes 70 cents on his purchase of 50 cents, or 140 per cent. profit, being 60 per cent. more than he makes by selling any other yeast.

3rd—Each package contains 6 large cakes, at least 20 per cent. more yeast than the package of other makers, a great saving to the consumer.

4th—"Barm" Yeast is of exceptional merit, only requiring a trial to be appreciated, and we guarantee all goods to be thoroughly tested before leaving the factory.

The money has been deposited with the CANADIAN GROCER. We refer you to the proprietors of that paper, who will pay the amounts to the winners when satisfactory evidence of sales is furnished to them.

EXPERIENCES OF AN OLD GROCERY CLERK.

The vast difference between the experience of the grocery clerk of to-day and his predecessor of 35 years ago has prompted the writer to give the rising generation of grocers an idea of how business was conducted in the fifties.

In the year 1856 I found myself on a month's trial in a large retail grocery house, the magnitude of which may be imagined from the fact that the staff consisted of 12 countermen, whose duties were constantly taken up with either waiting on customers or preparing for market days. The first duty assigned me was the cash desk, and although it might appear an easy task, it moreover had its cares and embarrassments when it is considered that $5,000 per week was the usual takings. Things worked along smoothly till the trial month was over, and my young mind was all aglow in my new position and I began to build castles in the air, but I found they were like "clouds without water." The month having expired the next thing in order was to have my apprenticeship papers signed, which was done in due conformity to law. The Governor, as we designated "the boss," agreeing that the business should be taught me in all its details, which portion of the contract he faithfully carried out, as we will subsequently see.

A month or two passed over when a new cash boy appeared and it then dawned upon my mind that the practical part of the business was about to commence, and so it was, when the Governor said "William, I want to introduce you to a new field of usefulness.

Step No. 2, as I shall call it, was the sugar cellar. The sugars in those days consisted of Porto Rico, Jamaica, Barbadoes, etc., etc., in their raw state, which had to be prepared by grinding and mixing to meet the several prices for retail trade. No refined sugars, with the exception of lump sugar, which came to us in titlars of about 35 lbs. each, were then in the market. Some idea of the amount of labor may be imagined when 15 or 20 hogsheads had to be ground, mixed and re-ground to produce the necessary color and quality to meet demands.

The hogsheads being emptied they were carefully scraped out and submitted to the Governor for inspection, and it is needless to say the scraping process had to be effectually done. Whether the writer had become an adept at hogshead scraping or a mixer and grinder of unusual ability I know not, but my stay among the saccharine matter was of some length.

Step No. 3 brings me into the warehouse, where my duties consisted of roasting and grinding coffee and chicory by hand, mixing and blending teas of all kinds. This department, while very laborious, was of great benefit to me in after life.

It next fell to my lot to take entire charge of the spice department, where all spices after having been sifted and freed from dust, &c., were ground by hand-mill, the law relating to adulteration being very strict. The general routine of warehouse work might weary the reader, but it might be well to refer to the fruit department.

Valencia raisins were imported in boxes of about 30 lbs. each, on the stalk, which, when broken up in bags, were sifted and hand-packed for market.

Currants were imported in barrels and butts, the latter a huge package weighing about two tons, which, being stripped of the wood, resembled somewhat the base of the Statue of Liberty. To break up a butt of currants and pass them through a hand-mill with brushes was a task not to be forgotten. After about two years of this drudgery and acquiring a practical knowledge of mixing, breaking, roasting, grinding, scraping, and other duties alluded to, I was then brought to the counter.

It might be well here to say that "the Governer," although a thorough business man, had some peculiar ideas, and had he lived in this enlightened age would be termed a crank of the first water.

I remember once a young man making application for a position, who had got himself up regardless of expense, finger ring, chain, scarf pin and gold-headed cane being among the things that attracted the eye of the Governor, who after making inquiries as to his previous occupation and references, suggested to the young man to call again and be careful to leave the jewelry, &c., behind and he might enter his application. The young man returned later, modestly and decently attired, and succeeded in finding employment. Years after he came to this country and has since retired on a competency.

My experiences at the counter lasted about a year, at the end of which time, my apprenticeship having expired, I removed to London and entered the employ of a wholesale grocer, in order to learn the wholesale business. Here my first work was in the office, and after acquiring a thorough knowledge of the routine of this department of the business, I was put at work to learn how to taste teas and accurately judge of their values. A portion of the basement of the building had been fitted up as a tea sampling room, with a spirit lamp, scales, cups, etc., and here, surrounded with samples of nearly every kind of tea in the market, I spent many days in acquiring the necessary knowledge to constitute me an expert buyer and seller of the leaf. My salary at this period was very small, being only £50 a year, equal to about $5.00 a week in American money, but upon completing my education in the tea-tasting line, a position was offered me by another firm at £120 per annum, and I started on the road to sell teas for my new employers with a high reputation for skill in detecting the differences between teas of all kinds and grades.

This brief sketch of the experiences of an English grocery clerk in acquiring the requisite knowledge of his avocation is not offered as possessing exceptional interest, except so far as it may show how thorough was the instruction given to beginners in the grocery business across the water in the fifties, in which respect there appears to be a great difference to-day.—W. G. in Merchants' Review.

'TIS BRANTFORD STARCH.

(Advertisement.)

"Ah, Tam! ah Tam! thou'lt get thy farin'!
In hell they'll roast thee like a herrin'!"
"Tam O'Shanter."

What is this rumbling sound we hear
Of gathering forces far and near?
Who hath this agitation willed,
And called anathemas from the Guild?
'Tis Brantford Starch!

Why do the men of Cornwall stand
With blanched face and palsied hand,
And curse so deep the horrid fate
Which wrests from them their fame to date.?
'Tis Brantford Starch!

Why does the doughty Archie curse
The dismal thing they call a hearse,
In which they say he is riding back
For lack of means to hire a hack?
'Tis Brantford Starch!

Why does friend Edgar show such spite
And write with all his little might,
To all his friends both far and near
To help him choke the foe they fear?
'Tis Brantford Starch!

What is it that doth shake the trade
And make each grocery man afraid
To buy, lest he may pay too dear,
The fall in prices being near?
'Tis Brantford Starch!

What is it that doth make Rome howl
And cause the Guild to fight and growl,
And harbor naughty vengeful feelings
Towards the firm who love fair dealings?
'Tis Brantford Starch!

THE STOVE IN THE VILLAGE STORE.

When the twilight had deepened to darkness
They gathered from far and near,
Old farmers who plodded the distance
As pilgrims their shrines to reserve;
At the shabby old store at the "corners"
They met and entered the door,
For the Mecca of these old cronies
Was the stove in the old village store.

It was guiltless of beauty or polish,
And its door was unskillfully hung,
But they made a glad circle around it,
And the genial warmth loosened each tongue;
And they talked of the crops and the weather,
Twin subjects to gossip most dear,
And the smoke from their pipes, as it blended,
Gave a tinge to the whole atmosphere.

Full many the tales they related,
And wondrous the yarns that they spun,
And doubtful the facts that they stated,
And harmless the wit and the fun;
But if ever discussion grew heated
It was all without tumult or din.
And they gave their respectful attention
When a customer chanced to come in.

When the evening was spent and the hour
For the time of their parting had come,
They rapped from their pipes the warm ashes
And reluctantly started for home,
Agreeing to meet on the morrow
When the day with its labors was o'er,
For the Mecca of all the old cronies
Was the stove in the old village store.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST,

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar-Refining.

The test by the Polariscope showed in yesterday s yield 99·90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

JOHN BAKER EDWARDS, P.L.D., D.C.L., F.C.S.,

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

Among the legal decisions upon appealed cases, given on another page, is that of Green vs. Minnes, which was originally tried last summer at Kingston before Justice Rose. That case was an action for damages from the defendants, Minnes & Burns, merchants, and E. S. Andrews, a collecting agent, for posting the name of the plaintiff's wife as a debtor, and offering for sale an account against her of $59. Judge Rose gave a written opinion and a verdict in the case, holding that there was no libel in the publishing in this manner of an account which every other means of collecting had failed to collect. But the verdict of the judges who tried the appeal, it will be noticed, set aside the ruling of Judge Rose and awarded $50 damages to the defendant. It is important to observe, however, that the principle set up by Judge Rose was not combatted by his learned brethren of the Queen's Bench. What they reversed was his verdict in the special circumstances of this case, not the written opinion he gave upon the matter of publishing accounts for sale. The points on which the success of the appeal was based were: that the advertising of the account was to blackmail defendant, that the debt was incurred not by Mrs. Green nor Mr. Green, but by a former husband of Mrs. Green; that the amount advertised was not the actual amount. This decision shows that when blackmail or coercion to pay are the objects of advertising an account, such advertising is libel. The difficulty of proving that such advertising is for neither purpose and has neither effect, must be sufficiently great in all circumstances to make such a mode of recourse to get payment a rather dangerous one.

A convention of the Ontario Patrons of Industry met here on Wednesday of last week and continued in session several days. Only such of the proceedings as it was deemed expedient to give to the daily newspaper press have yet transpired, but no doubt a considerable part of the business transacted related to questions which have no important bearing upon the retail trade of the country. It appears that the reduction last July in the duty upon salt has not allayed the agricultural discontent arising from the conditions of the trade in that article of merchandise. The Patrons aim to be independent of the combination among the manufacturers, and proposals appear to be entertained for the establishment of salt works to be controlled by the Patrons. That association cannot embark upon such an undertaking as the development of a well and the opening of a refinery. It is simply a benevolent society in the eye of the law. To go into any such business as the manufacture of salt it must be incorporated under a different act from that which constitutes it a provincial entity in Ontario. Consequently it is probable that a number of Patrons will seek incorporation for the purpose of forming a joint stock salt company, which will be run for the benefit of the association, but in the name of the company incorporated. No dividends are to be made; cheap salt is the sole object aimed at. Some $15,000 is believed to be the capital necessary for the enterprise, and this it is proposed to raise by stock sold in $1 shares. If the combination at any time lowers its price below that at which the Patron works can produce salt, the latter are to be closed down during such time. The works may be set going or they may not be; they have been proposed at all events. A resolution was passed that in the opinion of the Patrons the Government should enact a law making it a penal offence on the part of any citizen or firm to unduly raise the price of necessaries. The number of members is said to be 30,000, and the number of branch associations 1,500. A Dominion charter is being applied for.

It is in keeping with other ideas of the Patrons that they would introduce law as a factor in prices. This would indeed be an arbitrarily governed country if a trader could not be left to his own freedom in the matter of what price he should ask for his goods. Legislation that had that bent had to be swept away after Adam Smith's views began to take hold in trade. The only laws that remain for the prevention of undue advantage on the side of the seller are the local market laws that provide for the inspection of weight and quality in certain lines. Supply and demand will determine prices without the intervention of law. If law should be imported into the matter at all, it ought to be to sustain rather than to depress prices. The tendency of prices is downward in nearly all lines, and the effects of this are what the farmers themselves are suffering from. If they had to pay more for the things they buy they would be able to get more for their grain and other produce. Competition is one great agency that acts on the side of cheapness. No act of parliament would make the majority of lines any cheaper than they already are. The idea that combination unduly advances prices is perhaps more of a bugbear than it ought to be. Combines are learning that the advantages of union are in the reduction of expenses, and not in the advance of prices. The history of combines in the United States shows that the attempt to realize very high prices always brought new competitors into the field, who could perceive in the margin between a fair price and an immoderate one, a sufficient guarantee of protection to cope with the union upon.

ANOTHER EXAMPLE.

Melville & Co., general dry-goods merchants, of Owen Sound, have made an assignment of their affairs to John McClung, of 18 Wellington street east, Toronto. The liabilities are at present unknown. This firm courted failure by its alliance with the Patrons of Industry. The reaction against the Patrons cannot but be hastened by such results of signing their trade compact. Failure appears to be the inevitable and speedy destiny of those whom the Patrons once fasten upon. They do immense injury to trade in this way, and the extent of the injury is not to be measured by the failures which overtake those merchants who have subscribed to their conditions. Those merchants do fail, many of them already have failed, but the free competitors whom they drag down with them are numerous, and represent the loss which is especially to be deplored. Take a neighborhood where there are three or four stores under the thumb of the Patrons. When a man has maintained his independence against the competition of three or four Patron merchants within the range covered by his custom, he is next beset by a new form of irregular opposition in the sacrificing of the bankrupt stocks from the stores of these Patron merchants. He survives the Patron merchants, but he has almost certainly to succumb to the slaughtering of their bankrupt stocks. This is how they demoralize business They make use of the weaklings to sap the strength of the sturdy men in the trade. Wholesalers who sell to Patron merchants are parties to this injury to trade. They ought to have a little real concern for trade to moderate their eagerness to do business.

IN BUSINESS FOR OTHERS.

It is unquestionable that there are retailers in trade who are permitted to be there only by the grace of the houses which take the risk of furnishing them with goods. They are keeping store because these houses want to make some money out of them, and that probably will be the one end realized as the result of their keeping store, unless by a supreme effort on their part they can get into a position to choose their sellers. A retailer that cannot give sufficient credentials to secure credit from one house to make a start may be accepted by another. This difference may be owing to the fact that the former house has a good sound customer doing all the business there is to be done in the place where the applicant aims to open up, and the latter house is doing no business in that place at all. Consequently the starting of this new man by the latter house means the acquisition of a new customer. He goes in on the understanding that he is to sell goods, his profits are not calculated to amount to much in a competition whose object is to displace somebody that does not buy from the same house as he does. He is watched well to prevent his getting beyond the tether of his patron, and he is doing business solely for the benefit of the house which has taken him up. That house may be pleased to run him for three, four or five years, as circumstances may determine, but when that house concludes to run him no longer he is cast aside like a squeezed orange. This is one of the ways some wholesalers adopt for getting ahead of their rivals, who have a good customer somewhere that it is impossible for the other house to sell anything to. The taking up of a man who has no title to independence and who is delighted with the confidence placed in him, will usually damage the trade of the retailer who was there before him, but it will seldom add anything to the wealth of the dupe who filled the breach. If once the original trader at that place sees it to be his interest to treat with the house supplying the newcomer, the latter will find he has served his purpose and will be called off. Wholesale competition upon a strictly wholesale stage is keen enough and sufficiently depressing upon prices, without descending to retail stores for the purpose of carrying it on. Let retailers do all the competing that is done in retail stores.

BADLY TIED PARCELS.

A parcel that won't hang together till the customer gets home with it is apt to make mischief. It may cost the dealer the trade of that customer, or it may cost the careless clerk who tied it the loss of his situation. Fragile paper, brittle twine, dissolving knots, slack binding, will sunder hearts that ought to beat as one in the matter of trade. There is no mistaking the language of deep-seated wrath, when it is called forth by the collapse of a parcel that contains sugar, tea, coffee or any other loose aggregation of small particles. The man or woman who spills its contents is generally too warm at the moment to be reasoned with. The thing uppermost in the mind of such a person at such a time is an agitating desire to square matters with the man who put up the goods in that flabby way. It is bad enough to have the stuff that is in the package glide out of it upon the pavement. An unruly temper will wax wild enough over that part of the embarrassing mishap, but the getting down on one's knees to gather the stuff up again mortifies the most disciplined of us. The remembrance of being in that unheroic position for five or ten minutes, with a crowd looking on as he scooped with his hands, the stuff that got out of the parcel, will a year after fan the flame of a man's animosity against the grocery salesman who caused him to cut so ridiculous a figure. A parcel with a slithery feeling will always be likely to make a man, who has once had such an experience, a little decided and perhaps irregular in the language which he uses to condemn it. Things will have to be put up good and tight for him ever afterward.

Of course no salesman can be expected to put up a package that a 200-lb. man may with impunity suddenly sit down upon, or throw forty feet when the ice becomes too slippery for his feet to hold on to it. When a customer's equilibrium gets beyond his control parcels will be apt to suffer. Even in these circumstances the victim of the accident is always too serious to join in the joke that any less fleet-footed or strong-bodied person may venture to make at his expense. But he does not nurse any grudge against the grocer. It was not a matter of tying by which he was undone.

A case that made some people laugh came under notice the other morning. A woman was carrying a parcel of goods whose molecules moved freely against each other, and only needed an opening to slip away. The parcel had sagged out of shape, and the twine didn't seem to have any control over it. Slowly but surely the structure of the parcel accommodated itself to all outward impressions of the woman's hand or arm, and she hugged it in the vain hope of keeping it together. Soon all curbs were unavailing, and the stuff shot out of its paper prison as the snow shoots off a steep roof when the weather softens. It needed no physignomist to tell that the woman was outrageously mad. Her face grew very red and set looking, but her tongue told whom she was mad at. The man who tied the parcel was abused in unmeasured terms, and unless she changes her mind, that accident puts a date to her business with the grocery where the goods were bought. Grocers and grocer clerks should make fast and sure work of all packages.

TORONTO PEDLARS' LICENSE FEES.

Though the struggle between the grocers and the pedlars in the matter of licenses started under auspices favorable to the latter, the views of the grocers nevertheless triumphed. The Markets and Health Committee undoubtedly did show itself obsequious to the wishes of the Trades and Labor Council, though each member of that committee had been waited upon by members of the Retail Grocers' Association and his support was bespoken on the side of no reduction in the present fees. The matter had next to pass before the Executive Committee of the City Council, and though there had been no lobbying of the members of that committee, they reported in favor of the old fees being continued, and against the recommendation of the Markets and Health Committee. Finally, on Monday night the question came before the Council, and the reduction was disapproved. Consequently the pedlars have to pay the same fees now as they had to pay before, that is $30 per year. The good offices of their friend of the Trades and Labor Council did not therefore avail to secure the wished-for reduction. The course of the Council was not swayed either by the grocers or the pedlars. Economy and justice appeared to be the uppermost considerations in the minds of members of the Council in the settlement of this matter, and it is satisfactory that it was so.

BALANCING PRICES.

A circular has been issued by a Montreal house offering granulated and yellow in equal quantities at 3¾c. This gives a small margin of profit, but does not make the sugar as low as the Toronto houses now quote. The same firm offers granulated at 3½c., with tea at 20c. in equal quantities. This could be made a very profitable way of selling sugar, for 100 per cent. might be made on the tea.—Empire.

If this mode of doing business is to be one of the consequences of suspending the list, then the sooner the list is restored the better. A regular schedule price, whatever may be said against it, does not throw dust in the eyes of the purchaser. He knows that he is getting sugar at the market price when he pays the rate per pound that the agreement adopts. But when sugar and tea are combined, confusion is introduced, and a man does not know whether he is getting full market value in either. There can be no good purpose served by thus beclouding the business. A trader has a right to fair, open treatment, and there is nothing open about quotations based upon the coupling of goods. The retailer, moreover, must be aware that he has nothing to gain by buying in this "pig in a poke" sort of way. If granulated sugar can not be sold at less than 4½c. alone, than it is not worth any less along with tea. Why, therefore, is it quoted at less when offered with tea? Simply because some addition is made to the price of tea to compensate the wholesaler for the reduction. It is sufficiently puzzling to a retailer to distinguish between two kinds of tea that do not differ much in quality from each other, without having the matter more complicated by the introduction of sugar into the problem. Grades shade away from each other by such easy degrees that it is commonly hard to detect a difference in quality that corresponds to a difference in 2c. of quotation. When the teas are of higher grade the debateable margin may be as much as 5 to 6c. Advantage is taken of this mistiness in comparative value to lose a quarter of a cent a pound on a barrel of sugar and spread it over a chest of tea. The averaging of prices, the buyer may be assured, will be upwards, not downwards. The retailer will usually find that he can buy the tea alone, if he wants it badly, at a better concession than the 75c. that he is allowed on the barrel of granulated sugar for taking it.

SOME BUSINESS LAW.

In each of the following appeals, disposed of last week in Osgoode Hall, there is an important point for business men to make note of. The first relates to prefered creditors, and was heard before Chief Justice Armour and Justice Street in the Queens Bench Division, of the Divisional Court. It was the case of Lane v. Dungannon Driving Park Association.—Judgment on appeal by the unpreferred creditors of one Henderson, who had assigned to the plaintiff for the general benefit of creditors, from an order of Galt C. J., in chambers, directing distribution of a fund in court to certain holders of orders in priority to the appellants. This fund was paid into court by the defendants and was the fund charged by Henderson by means of orders upon the defendants in favor of creditors. Galt, C. J., held that these orders were equitable assignments pro tanto of the fund. The appellants contended that the orders were bills of exchange, not validly accepted, and that the fund should be distributed ratably. The appeal was argued on the 21st May, 1891. Judgment was then reserved, and on 19th June, 1891, the court held that the affidavit evidence was not satisfactory and directed that further evidence should be taken at the Goderich Autumn Assizes, 1891. This was done, and instead of the case being re-argued orally, written arguments were put in by agreement, and the case stood for judgment. Street J., held that the orders were not good equitable assignments by themselves, but looking at the evidence that they were good equitable assignments. Armour, C. J., came to the same conclusion on different grounds. Appeal dismissed with costs, here and below to be paid by the appellants. W. H. Blake for the unpreferred creditors. Garrow Q. C., for the holders of orders. Hoyles, Q. C., for the plaintiff.

In the Common Pleas Division were three important decisions. One was in the following case of fraudulent conveyance of goods, heard before Chief Justice Galt, and Justice Rose.

Masuret v. Stewart.—Judgment on appeal by the plaintiff from the judgment of Meredith, J., who tried the action at the Chancery Sittings at London, in November, 1891, dismissing it with costs as of a demurrer. The plaintiff sought to recover the value of a stock of goods transferred by the defendant Stewart, a judgment debtor of the plaintiff, to the defendant Lampman, who in turn disposed of it for value to a bona fide purchaser. The learned judge found for the plaintiff on the facts, holding that the transfer of the goods to Lampman was not bona-fide, and might have been set aside as fraudulent, but that the purchase money paid to Lampman could not be recovered, and that the plaintiff had therefore no remedy. Held (referring to a judgment of Lord Romilly in Cornish v. Clarke, L. R. 14, Eq. 184) that the moneys in the hands of Lampman are subject to the claims of the creditors. Judgment accordingly declaring the arrangement between the debtor and Lampman to have been a fraudulent scheme to defeat the creditors, and ordering Lampman to pay the proceeds of the sale of the goods in question into court to be subject to further order ; and to pay the costs of the action and of this motion. Further directions and costs reserved as respects the distribution of the moneys to be paid into court. Gibbons, Q. C., for the appeal. W. R. Meredith, Q. C., for the defendants contra.

An action before the same judges to recover on a non-negotiable bank check was that of Wolters v. McLaughlin.—Judgment on motion by the defendant to set aside the judgment of Street, J., who tried the action without a jury at Toronto, and to dismiss the action, or for a new trial, and on motion by the plaintiff to increase the plaintiff's recovery to the full-face value of the instrument sued on. Action on a non-negotiable bank cheque drawn by the defendant and handed over by the payee to the plaintiff, who gave value for it in the presence of the defendant as alleged. The trial judge gave the plaintiff judgment for the value of the goods of the plaintiff, which the defendant received in the transaction, which value was less than the face value of the cheque. Both motions dismissed with costs. W. R. Meredith, Q. C., and F. McPhillips for the defendant. H. Symons and D. W. Saunders for the plaintiff.

McLean v. Clark, before the same judges was a partnership case. Judgment on appeal by the defendant Clark from the judgment of McMahon, J., who tried the action at Perth. The appellant had carried on business at Smith's Falls, and had sold out to his co-defendant Maitland, taking as part of the consideration a chattel mortgage dated 15th June, 1887. The defendant Maitland wished to use Clark's name in his business, and Clark consented to allow him to carry it on under the trade name "Clark, Maitland & Co." on condition that a partnership memorandum showing Maitland to be the sole owner of the business should be registered. By oversight, the memorandum was not registered till the 26th of February, 1888. The plaintiffs, a firm of merchants in Montreal, gave credit to Maitland, and in this action sought to make Clark liable for the indebtedness of Clark, Maitland & Co., first, because Clark by his action in allowing his name to be used had held himself out as a partner, and second, on account of an alleged subsequent contract of guarantee entered into with them by Clark. The appeal is dismissed with costs, the court being of opinion that Clark's actions were sufficient to fix him with liability to the plaintiffs: and that he should have notified them of the change in the ownership of the business. B. M. Britton, Q.C., for the appeal. McCarthy, Q.C., for the plaintiffs, contra.

A well-known collecting agency case was appealed before Chief Justice Armour and Justice Falconbridge. It was as follows:—Green v. Minnes.—Judgment on motion by the plaintiffs John Green and his wife Sarah Green to reverse the judgment or verdict of Rose, J., in favor of the defendants or for a new trial. The action was brought against Minnes & Burns, shopkeepers, of Kingston, and E. S. Andrews, doing business as the Canadian Collecting Association, for libel in advertising for sale an account of Minnes & Burns for $59 against "Mrs. J. Green." The action was tried at Kingston, and by consent the jury was dispensed with and the judge tried the case as a jury and found a verdict for the defendants. He gave a written opinion, in which he held that the mere advertising of an account for sale was not libellous. The plaintiffs contended that the advertising of an account for sale was simply a device for blackmailing them and endeavoring to coerce them into paying the debt, and that at all events the account should not have been advertised the way it was, inasmuch as the liability to the defendants Minnes & Burns was incurred by the first husband of Mrs. Green or by his estate, and that certainly the plaintiff John Green had nothing to do with it, though the publication tended to bring him as well as his wife into contempt. It was also contended for the plaintiffs that the evidence of the gentleman who acted as junior counsel for them was improperly rejected, and also that the plaintiffs were entitled to a new trial on the ground of surprise. The court held that the action was maintainable, that the poster was libellous, and that the libel was not justified, because the amount advertised as due was greater than that actually due. Motion granted and judgment to be entered for plaintffs for $50 damages and costs. Aylesworth, Q. C., for the plaintiffs. John MacIntyre, Q.C., for the defendants.

ENDORSING NOTES.

The practice of endorsing notes to oblige friends or going security on bonds occasions quite as much loss to easy going business men, as that which came from bad debts. Some merchants find it quite impossible to refuse requests of this kind, even though well aware of the risk involved. As regards becoming security on bonds, there is no legitimate occasion for such an operation, as there are now scores of incorporated companies of large capital that undertake this business. As to endorsing notes, this should never be done without the most ample security. The fact that a borrower of money finds it necessary to secure such a guarantee is in most cases evidence of his financial weakness, and when such a request is made, the greatest caution is warranted. In reference to this, an eastern contemporary says :

Endorsing notes is a feature which has caused more or less trouble. Endorsers are not always protected by collateral, and many a man lends his name out of pure friendship, though never expecting to be called on to pay. This is a practice that is all too common in the every day run of business. Men endorse commercial paper which a bank will not take without such endorsement. The explanation is made, "Oh, it's only a matter of form to comply with the custom of my banker. It is as good as wheat," This may go on month after month, the notes being promptly met by the maker, and all uneasiness on the part of the endorser allayed. But experience has proved that it is a dangerous custom, without, of course, proper collateral security, and one which should be discouraged on just as strong grounds as that of the bondsman.—Grocer & Country Merchant.

THE FIRST SLEIGH RIDE OF THE HALIFAX R. G. A.

It was a merry party of close on to 100 which assembled at the corner of Brunswick and North streets, Halifax, shortly after 7.30 on Monday evening, the 22nd ultimo, and took seats in three four-horse sleighs belonging to Isenor and Joe Hubley. 'Twas the first annual sleigh ride of that energetic young organization, the Retail Grocers' association, and a right royal jolly party it turned out to be. The "going" until the Three-Mile house had been reached was wretched, but after that point was passed quick time was made to Bedford, the way being enlivened by song and jest and laughter, the echoes of which made the "welkin" ring.

The objective point, Wilson's, being reached, the party divided up into little knots in the different rooms, and various games were indulged in until dinner was announced, when under the guidance of the officers, everyone was seated around the neatly-set tables and invited to "set-to." At the head of the table was seated President J. A. Gass (who makes an excellent presiding officer), on his right being Hon. W. S. Fielding, provincial secretary ; Speaker M. J. Power, of the local house ; Secretary Bishop, of the association, and Ald. Outhit. To the left were Ald. W. F. Pickering, Stipendiary Magistrate Motton, City Medical Officer Trenaman and Ald. Wier. Vice-President Andrew Hubley upheld the dignity of the association at the other end of the board.

The post-prandial exercises were opened by the president, who proposed the time-honored toast of "God save the queen," the assemblage joining in a verse of the national anthem. This was followed by the "Dominion and local parliaments," which brought to their feet Messrs. Fielding and Power, both of whom highly praised the organization and wished it every success. The speech of the premier was especially happy and apropos, pointed with good advice and bristling with quiet humor.

Secretary Bishop next proposed "The mayor and corporation," joining therewith the names of the stipendiary magistrate and city medical officer. Ald. Pickering replied for "his worship" in a short, practical address, pointing out to the grocers the great interest they all should take in the measure now before the council relative to taxation Ald. Wier spoke shortly, and was followed by the gentleman of the benign countenance who presides at the usual ten o'clock services in the basement of the city hall. On this occasion the worthy magistrate was in excellent humor, and convulsed the assemblage with witty stories, as only he—and Chauncey M. Depew—can. Dr. Trenaman spoke briefly.

Vice-president Hubley then gave "Our brother guests," which was responded to by George Connor, of the Intercolonial, "Joe" Murphy and Mr. Wood.

This ended the toast list, but not the fun, for Stipendiary Motton and Premier Fielding endeavored to outshine one another in a recital of witty stories, ending with honors even and a loss of vest buttons on the part of their auditors. Secretary Bishop recited capitally, other members sang, and then a separation to the other rooms took place.

Amerino's orchestra discoursed tuneful music during the progress of the dinner, and many were induced to trip the light fantastic afterward. But a dance, after all, is never a dance unless joined in by the ladies.

At 3.30 a departure cityward was made, which was reached in a little over an hour without mishap of a serious nature.

The competent committee who planned and so successively carried out this, the first sleigh ride of the Halifax Retail Grocers' Association, have every reason to be proud of the success which crowned their efforts, and it is to be hoped it will be followed by many others of an equally enjoyable character.

The dinner was pronounced by those who have been there many a time and oft before to be one of the best which Wilson had ever spread. At any rate the grocers and their guests had excellent appetites, and did full justice to the productions of William's kitchen.

Nearly all of the speeches of the evening had pointed reference to the eight-hour movement, each mention of which was loudly applauded.

IRRESPONSIBLE HELPERS.

A provision dealer, who has a place of business of considerable pretensions in one of the suburban districts, was called to the sick bed of his father, in a Vermont town, not long since, and felt perfectly safe in leaving the store in charge of his foreman.

The foreman, learning that the proprietor would be gone at least a week, concluded to take a little respite from business himself, and accordingly, left the place in charge of one of the clerks who had not been employed in the store long enough to become acquainted with the names of the customers, although he knew most of them by sight, and had some distinguishing mark for each.

Saturday was a busy day, and the foreman returned and was kept so well employed that he did not have time to look over the charge book all that day. On Monday the proprietor returned and found the foreman and the clerk who was left in charge having a wordy discussion. It appeared that the clerk had put down on the charge book several items of which the following are but samples : Two pounds sirloin steak to "old lady with grey curls ;" eight pounds of corned beef and one head of cabbage to "red-headed girl" ; three pounds of rump steak, one pound of bacon, one dozen eggs to "girl with red apron and freckles."

It is needless to say that the foreman is now looking for a situation, while the proprietor is awaiting the coming in of the red-headed girl and the others, that he may know to whom to charge the various articles of merchandise.—Boston Herald.

The above, although humorous, is typical of a certain class of helpers. They never work even when under the eye of their employer, with a devotion to and interest in the business that indicates that its prosperity and success is any of their concern. When free from personal supervision they are indifferent, careless, and frequently sacrifice their employers' interest for self-gratification.

The ideal clerk works for another with the same zeal and steadiness with which he would if in business for himself. He does not invent excuses or steal away to witness a ball match in summer, or attend a skating carnival in winter. His thoughts are not pre-occupied with affairs foreign to the business. Stupidity in a clerk is inexcusable and incurable, and the sooner such a one is discharged, the better. In the case noted above, the clerk might have neglected to have identified customers as he did. One would, however, imagine that he would have had wit enough to ask for the names of unknown buyers. The ideal clerk has a natural aptitude for business, the value of which is enhanced by experience and careful training. Those naturally dull, slow, unreliable, are drags, and can seldom if ever be cured of their evil ways. It's in the blood. The remedy is to avoid hiring such fellows.—American Grocer.

HERRING OR "SARDINE" PACKING.

The sardine is a little fish that runs in schools or myriads at certain seasons along the coasts of France, Spain and Italy. No one knows where it comes from or just why it frequents those shores periodically, but there is no doubt that it is very good to eat, especially preserved in olive oil. The business of preparing it in this way is an important industry in the countries mentioned, and great were the lamentations a few years ago when for awhile it exhibited a disposition to alter its habits and sheer off to sea after passing the Straits of Gibraltar on its way north, without giving the fishermen of the Bay of Biscay, oh! so much as a chance to make it a captive for the pot. However, there are many kinds of sardines which have done this original species the compliment to assume its name. Norway puts up small herring as "sardines." So does Japan, exporting large quantities. Germany does an immense export business in "Russian sardines," which are simply herring cooked and packed with spices. Before the Franco Prussian war great quantities of these Russian sardines were sold in this country. That tremendous conflict interrupted the supply, and the cute dealers in America bethought themselves that there was a similar fish, plentiful beyond numbers, in the New England waters, which might be a suitable substitute. From the demand thus unexpectedly originated arose the present. Before that time, early in the sixties, a Maine packer of lobsters and shell fish named Burnham had conceived the idea of utilizing the small herring, so plentiful off that coast, as a substitute for the sardine. To familiarize himself with the methods employed in the preparation of the real article he went to France and made a tour of inspection of the canneries in that country, taking with him a man who hired out as a laborer in the establishments, in order that he might thoroughly familiarize himself with the details. Returning to the United States he set up a factory at Eastport and proceeded to can American sardines. Unfortunately the foggy climate was unfavorable to drying the little fishes, which is an indispensable preliminary to cooking them. The result was that the moisture remaining in them mixed with the oil in the cans, causing the latter to become tainted, and thus imparting an unpleasant flavor, which rendered the product unmarketable. On this account the enterprise was abandoned. Nevertheless, in 1872, it was taken up again by other parties, and promptly made a success. The whole difficulty lay in the drying, and that has been overcome by artificial process. In southern France it is possible to dry the little fishes in the sun with sufficient quickness, but not so in Maine as the time required is so long that they become stale. The French method is to cut off the heads and eviscerate them as quickly as possible, then to soak them in salt water for an hour, after which they are dried. So much being accomplished, they are ready to be placed in wire baskets and submerged in a boiling cauldron of olive oil for two or three minutes, according to their size, after which they are packed in the cans as snugly as possible; the cans are filled with olive oil, sealed with solder, and are ready for market. The trouble as to the drying on the Maine coast has been got over by utilizing dry heat supplied by a furnace. Steam has also been used for the cooking, the oil being merely added for preservative purposes in the cans. Another method employed to a great extent is that of the oven, in which the drying and cooking are performed simultaneously. For this process the great advantage is claimed that herring thus treated can be taken from the water and canned fresh in next to no time, only a few minutes being required for the operation. Thus they keep better and have a superior flavor. Some manufacturers, however, believe that the fish fried in oil are more palatable. On the other hand, it is contended that inasmuch as for economy's sake the same oil must be used for many batches, the fluid soon becomes filled with scales and refuse, which burns on the bottom, and imparts to the product a bitter and unpleasant taste. After coming from the frying pan, or the ovens, the herring go into the hands of the packers, usually women, who sort them according to their sizes, and put them in the boxes, which are then filled with oil. Olive oil, being costly, has been altogether superseded for this purpose by cottonseed and peanut oils, the latter being considered a preferable article. Even in France substitutes are largely employed in the preparation of sardines. The bigger fish are put up in layers with whole spices or mustard, after the manner of the old-time Russian sardines. Two or three factories still pack a few cans annually of large herring, bearing the trade name of "brook trout," but the brand has never been received with conspicuous favor. The small herring used by the sardine industry are very abundant all along the Maine coast east of the Ponobscot. They seem to prefer a bold and rocky shore, about which they gather in large numbers for the purpose of feeding. Until recently a favorite method of catching them was by "torching," which was a plan adopted by the Indians, who used it for ever so long before the white man landed upon the shores of America. According to this process a wire basket filled with blazing birch bark is suspended in front of the bow of a boat, which is rowed along the shore at a moderate speed, while a man stands forward with a dip net and scoops in by the bushel the fish as they gather, attracted by the light. Year by year the supply of birch bark has diminished, and the fishermen have been obliged to go farther and farther after it. Many of them substituted for it cotton batting saturated with kerosene; but this excited unfavorable notice from the weir fishermen, who claimed that the continued dropping of oil upon the water was likely to drive away the fish from the shore. Accordingly a law has been revived in Canadian waters prohibiting this practice. A curious belief is generally accepted among the fisher folk to the effect that herring caught with torches do not keep fresh nearly so long as those captured in weirs, by which nearly all of the crop is at present obtained for market. Formerly the fish were brought to the canneries by the men who caught them, but the desire of the canners to secure the largest possible quantities led them to introduce the practice of sending for the fish, which has since become universal. A fleet of 125 boats, with about 200 men, is now regularly employed in collecting and running them to the factories. All have holds in the centre, covered with hatches to protect the herring from the sun and from the water. When there is a calm a small steamer tows the boats. The making of the tin cans or boxes in which the products are packed is quite an important branch of the work at the cannery. Two sets of men are employed, the canmakers, who manipulate the machines by which the tin is cut, bent and stamped into the various shapes and sizes required, and the seamers, who, with a soldering iron, join the ends together and insert the bottoms. After the cans have been filled they go to the sealers, who solder on the covers, making them perfectly air-tight.—Exchange.

SENSITIVENESS OF EGGS.

One is apt to learn a good many queer things in this business, said the manager of a storage warehouse lately. "A number of articles stored here," he continued, "are particularly susceptible to odours of other articles. Eggs are the most noticeable of this class. If for instance, fish were to be stored in the same compartment with eggs, the latter would in a very short time acquire such a fishy taste as to be almost unfit to eat. Lemons, however, seem to have the most pronounced effect upon eggs. It may seem strange to you, but it is nevertheless a fact that we made egg lemonade here one day last summer without lemons. A box of lemons had by accident been placed in the room where several crates of eggs were stored. Some of the eggs taken from the crate nearest the lemons were used in the manufacture of the beverage. They had become so impregnated by the odour from the fruit that the use of lemons was not necessary. Of course the beverage was rather poor in quality, but it was egg lemonade just the same—The Provision Trades Gazette.

EDUCATE YOUR CUSTOMERS.

It is undoubtedly true that many of the evils which afflict the mercantile trade, and against which there are so many unavailing protests, are due to the ignorance and thoughtlessness of customers. They need educating in their duty to the merchant from whom they obtain their daily "necessaries of life," and also wherein their own best interests lie. Many consumers, whose patronage may in other ways be desirable, are a real aggravation to the retail merchant through thoughtlessness or indifference regarding his needs and convenience. Many are unreasonable in their demands, while at the same time being truly ignorant of the fact that they are jarring the nerves and trying the forbearance of the forced-to-be patient merchant to an almost unbearable degree.

These generalities relative to the ignorance, heedlessness and indifference of the average patron of the retail store might be detailed to considerable length, but are too patent to the experienced merchant to need extended specifications. Among other things may be mentioned the unreasonable hours he is compelled to keep his place open to accommodate patrons who could just as well as not buy their supplies during proper business hours; another evil is the really thoughtless or reckless manner in which many persons take advantage of the universal credit system, whereby they wrong both themselves and the merchant; a possibly minor but real anoyance to the dealer in food supplies especially is when customers delay giving orders until the last moment and then raise a holy howl if the goods are not promptly delivered, never thinking that there are others to serve besides themselves. And so the list might be extended, but it is hardly necessary to do so.

The trade papers are full of advice and instructions as to the manner in which the merchant should conduct his affairs, much of which is, if heeded, good and useful, but in many essentials the people outside of the business class need teaching also. How to impart this instruction is a question for consideration. United, systematic effort and action on the part of dealers would accomplish desirable results, but it is hardly to be expected that such a state of affairs will ever be found existing among the retailing fraternity.

Good seed might be sown by individual effort, which, in time, would yield a rich harvest, and it is concerning the kind of seed to use that we have a suggestion to offer, viz., get your customers interested in the papers published in the interest of your line of trade. (It is presumed, of course, that you take and carefully read one or more of such papers.) Call attention, at proper times, to some particular article that you think would interest a patron, and by this means you will aid in educating your intelligent customer in his duty so far as it concerns the business transactions between him and yourself.—Merchant Sentinel.

DUTY OF THE SELLER.

In these days of lively competition and the struggle to amass fortunes in business life, says an exchange, there is a question which comes up ever and anon, and must be settled sooner or later, in one way or another. It is the duty the seller owes to himself and his fellow men. One business man who says that "no one will deny that there exist unprincipled men in all occupations," but who feels "sorry for anyone who claims it for a necessity," writes: "The honest merchant marked his prices in plain figures, and all his customers fared alike. This plan was so fast destroying the trade of the unscrupulous dealers that they had to adopt it, and to-day the majority of the retail dealers have this system; we may say from policy, rather than from principle; but the result is that the innocent purchaser does not pay the price of a good article for a poor one.

The retail trade is mentioned by this man, but why not apply the same principle to all dealers? Why not have everyone in business life work in harmony with each other? It is a pleasing fact that the custom is becoming more and more universal among business men all over the country. An honest dealer will make a fixed price on every article, and then with so much discount, for such and such amount of purchase and such and such a length of time, with a possible variation according to the rating of the customer's credit at the commercial agencies, the whole matter distinctly understood and lived up to, would vastly increase the proportion of honorable and right dealing in the business world.

Public opinion is beginning to drift in the direction of straight dealing in all branches of business. The Interstate Commerce Act was enacted to do away with a great deal of double dealing, and, although the measure has failed in some respects, it has been a step in the right direction, and with the right sort of men to remedy its faults it may yet prove to be a champion of right business principles, and do any amount of good in putting down the evils resulting from the manipulations of unprincipled men. There exists a strong desire among business men generally to do away with this double dealing without recourse to law, by eliminating such dealing from their own business.

Another matter comes up as to what is the right way and what is the wrong in doing business. Questions are recurring almost every day and have to be settled one way or the other, and it is not to be doubted that the majority of fair thinking men decide in the way that they themselves believe to be entirely fair. One man says that there is a time when one need not tell the whole truth about a matter. In such a case he thinks it would not be falsifying. He says: "A reasonable construction of the principle, when applied to business transactions, requires us to regard those with whom we deal as our equals, as having equal ability and better opportunity of knowing what best suits themselves. We are not, therefore, bound to become their guardians, or to advise them as to what we consider their best interest in the transaction.

"The duty of the seller to himself dispenses with this where it would conflict with his own interests." Some men hold that as long as they do not deceive their customer, and yet let him go into a bargain whereby they feel sure he will not profit, there is nothing out of the way in that. Of course in some cases it may be the buyer who is in the wrong, and may be able to drive a better bargain for himself, but that does not alter the question of the right of the seller. He is trying to sell an article and he does not care whether it does his purchaser any good or not. If it does not, however, the purchaser will look upon the transaction as dishonest, and a man who has been deceived has a good memory. It will be a losing game if played at too long. It is better to tell what is known about a thing, and then a man can do what he pleases and take the consequences. There are men who can do nothing with an article, and yet will not sell to one who could do much good with it, simply because the profits would be going away instead of coming in. If, however, the right principle was universal there would be no trouble of this kind as there would be no danger of a man's losing anything.

And then there is another phase of business principles to be touched upon. What should be the attitude of the employer toward his employes? Should he ask them to do anything which would interfere with their principles? Should he teach them to misrepresent articles for the sake of selling them? We know of one large business house and we hope there are many more like it, which publishes a hand-book for its commercial travelers, in which rules are laid down for dealing with customers. One of them is that under no circumstances shall they misrepresent an article to a dealer in order to make a sale. This house also goes on the one price plan and treats everyone alike. There is doubtless no need of mentioning this fact, for where there is one such house there are hundreds more just like it, in the methods of dealing with retailers.

It is the universal testimony of successful business men that there is only one course to take, whether they are dealing with customers or with employes, and that is the straightforward manner of doing business. One may sometimes think he is moving slowly, but in the long run there is no surer plan of success in business life. It is that kind of a man who is honored and trusted above all others and is at the head of his profession.

FRIENDSHIP IN TRADE.

A great deal of business is transacted on the basis of personal friendship. This fact was recently illustrated in one of its phases by Prof. Sizer, who said: "It is sometimes said there is no friendship in trade. There never was a greater fallacy. Suppose a man has travelled night and day among strangers, 1,000 miles to a great market town. He has left his family and friends, and his heart is hungry. He remembers perhaps, a merchant who is cheerful and has shown himself friendly, and when he crosses his threshold his heart bounds with delight as with a smile like a burst of sunshine that man takes him heartiy by the hand, and in a moment becomes to him, as it were, a substitute for the family and friends he has left behind, and it only remains to select the goods; they are already sold, and if the man be honest and name only fair prices for the goods, why should not that man be a lifelong customer? Who could win him away or prevent him from bringing his own friends to be well treated and become permanent customers? Suppose a salesman has 500 such. They cannot be coaxed away from him, unless goods are offered at prices below their market value by others." Therein is the real secret of how friendship profits in trade. If the salesman name fair prices and is honest, then the buyer may become a lifelong customer. There is no gainsaying the fact that friendship thus applied means very much in business relations, because it is an important means of introduction; it opens the path to preference; it gives the negotiator the first advantage; but when he has achieved that, it, after all, is as nothing unless he can also offer good goods at fair prices, for without these he cannot hold the custom he may have won on the strength of his own personality.—Northwest Trade.

MILLIONAIRE ADAMS' START.

A gentleman was reading about the troubles of the president of the Adams Express Company.

"I wonder," he said, "what the old man would say if he was here."

"What old man?"

"Old man Adams, founder of the company that bears his name."

"You knew him?"

"Slightly. He was a fine old man, and is another example of what an American boy can do or what can be done in this country. He began life as a stable boy, and his first promotion was to assistant bartender in Boston. Think of the chances he had of going to the devil. It is a wonder he didn't. There was a good souled old lady who lived in the house where Adams worked. She had two babies — girls — and when Adams wasn't mixing drinks for the Bostonians he was playing with those children. That showed what sort of boy he was. If he had lived in this age he would probably have spent his spare time on the race course. The good woman used to tell him she was sorry for him. He was an orphan since he was six. Then he would cry and the woman would pity him. She got him a place in a retail grocery store. He stuck to that until he began to prosper. After he had grown to be rich he heard that his benefactress was old and poor. He found her after a long search and pensioned her. Her two daughters had grown to womanhood and were living with her. One of them never married. Old man Adams made no allowance for her. She is still living and the allowance is still continued by old man Adams' son. The elder Adams always said he owed all he had to the woman who took him from behind the bar. There is gratitude for you, young man. It is a rare plant, I grant you, but like Dickens' ivy plant, it is rare, indeed."—New York Press.

CHANGE THE SYSTEM.

It is next to impossible to look through the columns of a trade paper without finding something in the shape of advice relative to how merchants shall, or ought to, do this, that or the other thing. We have also, to some extent, indulged in this little well meant pleasantry, looking at the matters in question possibly more from the high journalistic standpoint than from the entirely practical plane on which every day business affairs are conducted. At this time, however, we shall reserve the order and offer a few suggestions which may not inappropriatey be termed negative advice.

It is quite natural, right and proper that every man should desire what is due him, and he is entirely right in using all proper means to obtain that which belongs to him. No one will dispute the correctness of this statement, but in the collection of debts there is a right way and a wrong way—if not a wrong, at least an unjustifiable or unavailing way—to go about it.

Just so long as the indiscriminate credit system prevails among retailers, just that long will people buy injudiciously and the books of the merchant be burdened with many accounts which he will be unable to collect. Not every person who gets in debt to the merchant is a "dead beat," by any means; neither is every one who is slow in paying his bills dishonest. Many such a one has simply followed the system, thoughtlessly gone beyond his financial depth, and while perfectly willing to pay finds it an exceedingly difficult matter to do so. Others, again, meet with misfortune or unexpected reverses; they must have certain things which cash alone can provide; because of the system, they are indebted to the too accommodating merchant who has furnished them the "necessaries of life," and while they would be glad to pay every cent they owe, they find it absolutely impossible to do so, without being granted time.

The unfortunate classes above mentioned are simply victims of the universal credit system, for which the retail merchants themselves are more responsible than anyone else. They have educated the people up—or down—to procuring their necessary supplies by the credit method, and must, perforce, expect to accumulate a large stock of so-called "bad debts."

Change the system, and a better state of things will follow.—Grocer and Trade Index.

A very beautiful sample-room and store advertisement of Barm Yeast has been received, with the compliments of the manufacturers, at this office. The ornament is thankfully acknowledged. It is a picture, about 18 x 20 inches, in a handsome gilt frame. The back-ground of the picture is black, against which the large crystal-like letters of the words "Barm Yeast" look very rich. An insert between the two parts of this name, in the form of a smaller picture, set in a frame whose material is imitation of pearls, is avery pretty element in the whole.

MONTREAL TRADE CHAT.

Alex. Jones is home from the Townships and reports trade booming.

Fred. Walker the well known retail grocer's clerk is laid up at the point of death.

Mr. J. B. Dowling, of Dowling Bros., St. John, N.B., is in town and staying at the Windsor Hotel.

Mr. Jas. McLaren, of Messrs. Wright & Lackey, New York, has been in town for the last few days on business.

Robert Stewart, the Inverness, Que., grocer, was in town this week, but reports trade quiet down that way.

The wholesale trade here are still talking of the break in the combine. The majority will hold out against the kickers.

Mrs. Ransom, wife of Mr. Howard H. Ransom, of the firm of Messrs. Ransom, Forbes & Co., died suddenly on the 26th last month after a short illness.

Jos. Drouin, general storekeeper, of St. Antoine, Que., has assigned at the instance of Jos. Amyot & Frere. H. A. Bedard has been named provisional guardian.

Alex. Findlay, grocer, Point St. Charles, died suddenly last week. His wife was awakened by hearing him calling her. He was dying and before medical aid could be summoned he expired.

Mr. Malcolm Leitch, of Leitch Bros., Oak Lake, Man., who passed through Montreal a few weeks ago, is back here from the Lower Provinces. He says trade is good in that part of the country and that he has closed some large deals.

The Isle aux Coudres, Que., which has been looked upon as the home of smugglers, and the inhabitants of which have of late been demoralized by smuggled whiskey, has turned over a new leaf. A religious retreat has just been preached there and nearly all the inhabitants have solemnly undertaken, crucifix in hand, to abandon their evil ways.

The explosion of some oil caused fire to break out in the confectionery establishment of Jos. Lattrell & Co., St. Cunegonde, last week. Two of the factory girls jumped from the second storey but happily escaped injury. The loss is about $5,000, fully insured.

The entertainment committee of the Dominion Commercial Travellers' Association have decided to have a concert and hop at the Athletic club house on the 10th of the month, to which all the members of the D. C. T. A. and their lady friends are invited.

A wholesale fish establishment on Common street was broken into by burglars last week, who carted away a lot of boneless codfish and cod tongues, besides a considerable quantity of other kinds of fish. The same store was broken into a short time ago and robbed of quite a bit of stock.

THE SECRET OF A GOOD MEMORY.

Whatever may be said in regard to training the memory, it must be remembered that memory is not, as used to be supposed, an independent faculty of the mind that in some mysterious way may be directly strengthened by exercise, as the blacksmith strengthens his arm; but that memory as relentive is due to the plasticity of nerve substance, and to the property of nerve centres by which they retain, in growth, their functional modifications; and that recollection depends upon physiological conditions, such as the cerebral circulation and the proper functioning of nerve cells; moreover, that a complete act of recollection is a complex process involving comparison, inference and the like

Hence, whatever in general is conducive to vigorous health, and whatever tends to habits of clear and orderly thinking—such conditions will aid recollection. And whatever is detrimental to the normal functioning of the nerve-cells—fatigue, intense emotion or the like—and whatever blinds the judgment, will hinder recollection. In short, all psychological beatitudes are on the head of him who has good health, sane emotions and trained power of attention. But no amount of study, nor all the prescriptions mnemonic doctors, from Simonides to Loisette (except so far as they train attention) can atone for anemia of body or lack of the power of attention.—Scribner.

TORONTO, March 3, 1892.

GROCERIES.

A gleam of brightness was let into trade by the opening of a new month on Tuesday, traders usually preferring to begin their engagements at the beginning of a month, and to liquidate old scores before they commence upon new ones. The run of the orders was not particularly cheering, however, even though the occasion did favor improvement. The upward turn that prices might be looked for to take when the demand got better has not yet been realized. In fact the week's business has been very much characterized by cutting, and the cutting has not been restricted to any one line. Sugars, dried fruits, tea, even canned goods have all been more or less affected by shading. There is far from a satisfactory feeling among wholesalers, with the volume of trade or the profit realized upon it. The abandonment of the sugar list caused widespread derangement in the trade, which is apparent in the more cautious temper of the demand, in the cutting of prices in many lines, the combining of tea with sugar, and in other ways. Payments are reported to have been quite satisfactory for February.

CANNED GOODS.

The position of holders is unaltered, and $1.05 to $1.10 remain the quotations on assorted vegetables in round lots. There has been some business at $1.05, not because of any abatement of firmness, but to induce more general business. The large holders do not concede anything, and $1.10 is usually obtained for all first class goods. The movement was very limited during the past week. Inquiries, however, continue numerous. The lots going out have been mostly on the small side, and no shipments of cars have been reported, though inquiries for cars have been received. Fruits have had some sale, but not a large or very general one. Salmon is featureless and unchanged at $1.40 and upwards.

COFFEE.

Spot prices in the leading distributing markets for Brazil coffees are firm and higher. In New York, present quotations are quite stiff. The better grades are unobtainable there at the moment. Here there is but a small stock. Prices do not waver. They are steady at from 18c. Javas and Mochas are unchanged from 27c. upwards. The demand for coffees of all kinds is quiet.

DRIED FRUIT.

No recovery in the price of Valencia raisins is to be noted. They are to be had at as low as 4¾c. No demand of any consequence is being experienced. Sultana raisins appear to be in momentary demand and scarce on spot at 9½ to 10½c. A round lot of 100 boxes changed hands on Tuesday between houses upon the street. Currants are inactive but generally firm, especially is good fruit firm. Low grade stock does not yet find its way readily to this market. There is nothing in fact to warrant importations of any description at the present time, as there is no demand of any moment. The range of prices runs from 5½c. up. There is some choice fruit held on spot and the owners of it do not feel called upon to sacrifice it, as there is little if any choice stock to be got in New York. Prunes do not receive much attention. There appears to be a much lower demand for them this year than formerly, the reason probably being the abundance and cheapness of native fruits, particularly dried and evaporated apples.

NUTS.

The usual intermittent and hand to mouth business goes on without any marked influence upon the supply either to lower it or increase its value appreciably. No changes are called for in Prices Current.

RICE AND SPICES.

No wants of importance are signified yet in the local rice market, which consequently is dull and unchanged, with limited stocks in store.

Spices are fairly active, with more steadiness in staples- Pepper fluctuated somewhat since last report, but as the upward movement was accompanied by a downward one, the price remains where it was before.

SUGAR.

There has been no raid made upon the market, but the wants of leading retailers are supposed to be supplied in granulated for some time to come, they evidently mistrusting that such values could not always be got. What trade is done now is of small proportions and for small parcels. The refiners have stiffened values 1-16c., and in accordance with that wholesalers are asking more, the majority of them now wanting 4⅝c. This they cannot always get, so that 4½c. is quite commonly taken. The rule is to quote 4½c. from Montreal and 4⅝c. here. Yellow quotes at 3½c. in some houses and 3⅝c. in others as bottom price. There is evidently no money in sugar for the jobbers. Consequently no great eagerness to make sales is observable. The upshot of the matter might possibly be a return to the list. A meeting of the Guild is to be held this week in Montreal.

The following is clipped from the Halifax Chronicle :

The sugar refiners are becoming alarmed at the situation in the cut rate sugar war. They will meet here on March 2nd to settle the disturbance if possible. It is expected every refinery in the Dominion will be represented, as the refiners realize the gravity of the situation, the result of which may be to force competition among themselves. Granulated sugar is now down to 4½ cents, at 30 days.

Willet & Gray in their New York weekly Sugar Statistical say :

Raws—The feature of the week has been the unexplained weakness of the European markets, but as they have for some time been quoted above the parity of our markets the decline has not yet brought beet sugar into competition with cane Refiners are, however, quite ready to use such an important factor with which to depress the cane sugar market, and hence, in spite of small carrying stocks, they have withdrawn from the market to the extent of not being ready buyers on last week's basis, and as a result holders are obliged to submit to a small fractional decline in order to make sales from vessel without storing. Any improvement in Europe would be followed by more firmness here, but further decline in Europe may give the long-waited-for opportunity for large purchases of cane sugar without advancing prices. At the present time the markets are working in favor of buyers, and the intrinsic strength of the situation must be left to develop at some future time.

Refined—The production continues on a quite large scale for the season, and the country takes a good proportion of it without so much hesitation as heretofore, being now apparently satisfied with the safety of present low prices, and also a little nervous, perhaps as to their continuance, unless the raw sugar market should unexpectedly show weakness and decline. While granulated sugar is steadily held at the fixed price of 3.92c. net cash, the soft grades are more subject to slight variations from day to day, both up and down, dependent upon the supply and demand.

Beet crop—Mr. Licht has increased his estimate for Germany by 10,000 tons, and reduced it 40,000 tons for France, Austria, Holland and Belgium, making a net reduction of 30,000 tons. The sowing for the next beet crop will be larger than the last, except for the concerted movement going on among fabricants to discountenance any further increase in the acreage. It is pointed out that last year's acreage, in a favorable season, will produce several hundred thousand tons more sugar than the actual outturn last season, and hence to increase the acreage again, and to have a favorable growing season, will mean more sugar than can be consumed and unprofitable prices. Beet root growers must not count on a continued increase of consumption in the United States like that of 1891, although of course it will continue to increase to a fair extent with the increase of population and great prosperity of the people.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

With the exception of the continuance of remarkably low prices, there is nothing to note in the syrup market, the demand being low and the supply ample. As low as 1⅞c. is quoted.

Molasses is very slow of sale. Small stocks are held, and but small parcels are ever called for on this market.

MARKETS—Continued.

TEAS.

The large stock of very low grade tea depresses prices on spot. The better grades are not however plentiful. The abundance is chiefly in lines not above 18c. The demand though is generally for the cheaper stock, the grades quoted at 14 to 18c. being in chief request. Good medium Japans are especially scarce and firm.

The demand for Indian teas continues good, and promises well for the future, a much more general use of Assam teas may be looked for, and the taste for these teas is generally but surely increasing.

The supply of Indian tea brought forward still consists principally of common grades of much inferior quality to those offered a few weeks ago (says the Produce Markets' Review), while prices have been irregular, and occasionally lower, for the less desirable parcels. Unless there is a much stronger demand for these grades, current rates can hardly be maintained, notwithstanding their present low prices. On the other hand, teas of good useful quality are scarce, and are eagerly sought after at higher prices. This has been particularly noticeable in the past week's public sales, more especially for whole-leaf kinds, which showed considerable advance from the lowest point. Broken Pekoes have shared in the upward movement, but to a smaller extent, while the finest grades continue to be actively competed for at prices showing a further rise. The enquiry, in fact, during the past season has been for tea with quality, which proves that the demand merely for price is declining. Importers would do well to note this, and instead of flooding the market with tea of undesirable character, they should turn their attention to procuring a larger proportion of good medium and fine descriptions, in doing which their interests would undoubtedly be better served. If, however, they persist in the present course, which will largely augment the supply in the coming season, coupled with a probable import of nearly 80,000,000 lbs. from Ceylon, they must be prepared to face the lowest prices yet recorded. At the public sales 32,623 packages were brought forward, and the bidding was brisk for all good grades, but the common sorts were comparatively neglected. The Ceylon sales, in accordance with the reports from Ceylon as to the quantity exported, have again been rather smaller than was generally anticipated by the home trade, and prices have been fully maintained, and in most cases have exceeded the January quotations. The quality has been fairly good, but perfect excellence in this respect is hardly to be expected until rather later on in the season. Strong efforts are evidently to be made not only by merchants and dealers, but also by representatives sent direct from the island, to push Ceylon teas at the forthcoming Chicago Exhibition ; and when the success which attended the efforts made at the late Colonial Exhibition to bring Ceylon teas into general favor is considered, it is hardly to be doubted that a great stride will also be made by these means in the United States. This question, although not of immediate importance, must ultimately have a strong bearing upon the future price of tea in general.

MARKET NOTES.

Cairn's marmalade is now in stock at Smith & Keighley's.

Our Prices Current this week show a reduction of ¼c. in St. Lawrence and Edwardsburg Co's. prices of Canadian Laundry Starch. The price now quoted by these companies is 3½c. Further changes may yet take place.

PETROLEUM

Demand for refined is now quite low, the week's business being reported as much below that of last week. A shrinking business is now to be looked for. The prices are steady and unchanged on a basis of 15c.

The Petrolia Advertiser reports : Petrolia crude $1,29 per barrel, Oil Springs crude $1.29½ per barrel. Although prices for our raw material are somewhat on the droop, the trade expansion looked for is coming slowly. There is no doubt but that buyers would become a little uneasy if there were any further break in the price of the refined article, and jobbers and retailers in all places would feel the same as to their future investments. One thing there can be no doubt of, however, and that is the fact that the Canadian crude oil business, as far as the producers are concerned, never was in a more satisfactory condition and on a more solid and substantial basis. Of course money is not as plentiful as many would desire, but anyway, with this as a drawback, enterprise is scarcely halting, and those that are in a position to do so continue their drilling operations and other investments with their usual confidence.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

There is little variation in the general tenor of the report as it has been running for the past several weeks. The value of good dairy tubs still runs up to 21c. for choice. The demand still considerably outruns the supply, and half as much more butter as comes to hand would easily find sale. Large rolls are somewhat more plentiful, but still far from abundant. The price going ranges from 16 to 19c. for all grades above medium. Creamery tub is selling at 25c. There appears to be a feeling that values will grow stiffer before long, some dealers predicting quite a long advance on present prices. One thing is clear, the market was never in a better condition at this season. Stocks are all run down, nothing of any description being held on spot. Montreal buyers are still picking up butter in all parts of the west, every grade finding a price in that market. Hence receipts here have declined.

Cheese is steady at former prices, 12½c. being the outside quotation, and applying to small lots. Large parcels go at 12c A fair sized stock of summer cheese to sell at 10c. appears to be held.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES—The price of good hard fruit, such as Spies and Greenings, does not exceed $2.50, and shades downwards for quality.

BEANS—Choice hand picked are worth $1.35 jobbed out. Round lots are $1 to $1.25 according to quality.

CRANBERRIES—The value steadily depreciates under the weight of stock and a shrunken demand. The range is now $5.50 to $6.

DRIED APPLES—Are steady at 4½ to 5c. There has been some business done for delivery against the opening of navigation.

EVAPORATED APPLES—There is no trade of any consequence now current, but prices are unchanged at 7½ to 8½c.

EGGS—The demand for eggs has become stronger with the opening of Lent, but notwithstanding that, the price is lower, a free supply having set in. Fresh are now 17c. Limed bring 14c. with difficulty.

HIDES—A diminished supply does not strengthen prices, which are on a basis of 4½c for green. Cured are dull at 5c.

HONEY—Extracted is listless at 8 to 10c., and sections are 14 to 16c.

HOPS—Holders are stiff in their views, and that gives a check to business. Buyers do not care to go beyond 22c., while sellers ask 14c. for prime stock. There is no business of any importance. Low grades are quoted from 18c. upwards.

ONIONS—are firm at $2.50 to $3 per barrel, the cold weather operating against delivery.

POTATOES—The price in cars is weak at 33 to 35c. Out of store lots are 45 to 50c.

SEEDS—The prices now quoted are what seeds are jobbed at, buying for export having ceased. Alsike is quoted at $6.50 to $8.50, according to quality. Red clover is $6.25 to $6.60. Timothy is $1.75 to $2. No Canadian crop is offering. Inquiry is active.

SKINS—Sheepskins are taken freely at $1.15 to $1.25. Calfskins are more plentiful at 5 to 7c.

TALLOW—Refined is 5½ to 6c. Rough is 2c.

WOOL—No improvement has taken place, 18c. being the best price going for fleeces.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

Diminished receipts have been the order of the week. Cars are becoming rarer. The chief supplies to hand this week have been street deliveries. The price ranges from $5.90 to $6.10. Products are firm and unchanged.

BACON—Long clear is steady at 8c. for small quantities, and 1¾c. for round lots. For smoked, heavy bellies are 10c., medium 10½c., boneless 11c.; backs are 10c., rolls are 8¾c.

HAMS—Are quiet at 10½ to 11c., with the leaning strongest on the side of the upper price.

LARD—Pure in tubs and pails is 10c.

BARREL PORK—Heavy mess is $13.50 to $15, the range being from old United States to new Canadian. Short cut is $16 to $16.50.

FRESH MEATS—Beef is 4½ to 5½c. in forequarters and 7½ to 8c. in hindquarters. Lamb is 8 to 9½c., mutton 7 to 7½c., veal is 8½ to 9c.

GREEN FRUIT.

There has been a fair amount of shipping since the beginning of the month. Palermo lemons are now about out of stock. Messinas quote from $2.60 to $3.25, but they are rapidly becoming worth more money, $4 being a not improbable price before long. The wastiness of stock is one cause of advance, as loss has to be suffered in the repacking. Bananas arrive only in cases and are worth $2.50. In milder weather cars will begin to arrive. Pineapples are scarce at $3 per doz.

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Oysters are plentiful and the past week has seen a great falling off in the demand, and dealers are refraining from ordering. Prices remain as before. Fish is plentiful, except herring, which are hard to procure. Prices remain firm. Owing to the large stocks and the uncertainty of the future demand, the probability is that these will not be much advance in prices for a week or two, that is, until dealers realize for certainty what the Lenten demand will be.

SALT.

Two cars of barrels at $1.20, one car of fine sacks at 80c. and two cars of coarse sacks at 70c., have been moved this week. Prices are easy. The demand for small quantities has been less brisk than usual.

DRY GOODS.

This is a busy week at the wholesale houses. The millinery openings have attracted a large number of ladies to the city, and many merchants have also taken advantage of the openings to visit the city and look up bargains for the spring trade, and consequently there is more rush than usual. Spring orders continue to come in, and in most cases are encouraging. Money also is moving but not so freely as some have expected.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, March 3rd, 1892.

The past week like the previous one, has shown no improved activity in certain lines and this is extending, and the tone generally shows a decided improvement. Remittances are still below what they should be, but wholesalers do not appear at all surprised or uneasy at the renewals which are being asked, and which are generally for only a short time. The chief feature of interest is sugar, which is being sold by wholesalers at lower prices than they are paying for it to the refiners. Teas continue very steady; coffees are very firm; syrups quiet; dried fruit is fairly active in a jobbing way.

SUGAR.

The local sugar market is regularly mixed up and nobody knows what the outcome will be, wholesalers trying to out do one another in the shading which they offer as inducements to buyers. The latter it is to be said are taking every advantage of this unusual state of affairs. They held back all through the winter in the expectation of some such developement in connection with the Guild, and now are buying heavily at the cuts offered which is making a very active market. Last week we noted cuts in granulated at 4⅜c. which is ⅛c. under the first cost from refiners. These sales must have necessitated therefore a direct loss to the jobbers, but matters went even further this week, and now it is a case of regular cut-throat competition between a leading English wholesale house and the French jobbers. The other English houses intended at first to go into the fight, but have decided since that the game is not worth the candle and are working quietly on the old price of 4½c. The French houses,

FLOUR AND FEED.

A duller and easier feeling in the flour market obtains this week. A few sales of cars for Quebec have been made, the inquiries from that quarter not having culminated in business till a slight concession on former figures could be obtained. The demand for feed has waned appreciably and an unsatisfactory trade has been done. Prices tend towards easier quotations.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are: Manitoba patents, $5.20; strong bakers', $4.85; Ontario patents, $4.40; straight roller, $4.75; extra, $4.10 to $4.15: low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are: Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.15 to $5.20; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.75 to $4.85; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90; straight roller, $4.10 to $4.20; extra, $3.95 to $4.00; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL—Oatmeal is $3.80 to $3.90. Cornmeal is $4.

BUCKWHEAT FLOUR—Is $4.50 per barrel.

FEED—Bran is $14 to $15, shorts $15 to $16, mixed feed $23 to $25, cracked corn $1.15, feeding corn 50 to 52, oats 33 to 34c.

HAY—is fairly active at $11.50 to $12 for No.1 timothy and $10 to $10.50 for mixed.

STRAW—is featureless at $6 to $6.50.

MONTREAL.

The local flour market continues dull and uninteresting, the feeling of holders being rather easier. The stocks in store show an increase of 4,028 barrels compared with a week ago, and a decerease of 4,803 barrels compared with a year ago. We quote as follows:—Winter patents, $5 to $5.25; spring patents, $5.40 to $5.50; straight rollers, $4.70 to $4.80; extra, $4 40 to $4.50; superfine, $4 to $4.10; city strong bakers', $5; strong bakers', $4.80 to $4.90.

The demand for oatmeal is small, with prices unchanged. Standard, per bag, $2.10 to $2.20; granulated, $2.10 to $2.20; rolled, $2.10 to $2.20.

Feed is quiet and easy. We quote:—Bran, $16 to $17; shorts, $17 to $18, and mouillie $24.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

Flour is holding firm at recent advances, though the trade yet is purely local. We expect to see a more general demand for breadstuffs than our market has shown the past month. Manitoba patents are selling at $5.85 to $5.90, Ontario High grade $5.10 to $5.20, Medium patents $4.90 to $5.

Corn Meal—The market is unchanged, prices are the same as last week with fair demand.

Oatmeal—The indications seem to be for slightly lower prices in oatmeal.

Hay—has advanced to $15 to $16 per ton, and as large quantities are being shipped, prices will likely rule higher.

however, emphatically assert that they will smite the disturber hip and thigh if it is necessary or possible. The firm in question, however, are hard customers to handle—they have seen their opponents' raise and gone them one better. They have issued a circular in which they state that they are willing to sell 5 bbls. granulated along with 5 bbls. yellow at 3¾c., or 5 bbls. granulated at 3½c. provided the purchaser takes in addition 5 half-chests of 20c. tea. This proposition is a new problem for the trade, and wholesalers who do a regular business are wondering how long it is to go on. A logical conclusion would be that it could not last very long, for it is not human nature to sell goods at a loss, but these gentlemen may have some other consideration that enters into the argument. Anyhow, matters in the sugar market are decidedly interesting. Under these circumstances a regular quotation is impossible.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are moving slowly and the business in molasses is confined to a small jobbing demand, stocks being well cleaned up in first hands. We quote Barbadoes 35c.; American 28c.; syrups are quoted at 25 to 28c. for medium bright, 30 to 45c. for choice; amber 40 to 45c.

TEAS.

There is a very good demand for all grades especially in the better qualities which are becoming very scarce, Japans worth from 18 to 25c. are in particularly good demand. Black teas are moving steadily but without any large turnovers lately. There is a good enquiry for Indian Ceylon teas, and some very fair lots have moved off during the week.

COFFEES.

Coffees are still dull and unchanged, and with the exeception of a few small jobbing dickers there is nothing to note. Prices rule firm on a basis of 18 to 20c. in Rios and Jamaicas.

RICE.

The rice market is quiet and unchanged, and in the absence of business prices rule steady and unchanged.

DRIED FRUIT.

Business continues quiet in dried fruit, and there is absolutely no change to report since our last. Prime Valencia raisins are in good demand at 5c., while 4¾c. is the inside figure for inferior stocks. Currants are in good demand with a fair trade doing on the basis of 5 to 5½c. There is a fair jobbing movement in prunes at 5½ to 6c. for Bosnais. Figs are steady at the old figure, viz.: 10c. Dates are unchanged at 5c. We quote prime Valencias at 5c.; currants at 5 to 5½c. for Patras, and 6 to 7c. for Vostizzas in cases; Bosnia prunes, 5½ to 6c.; figs 10.; and dates 5c. per lb.

NUTS.

In nuts there is a fair jobbing trade doing as noted last week. We quote :—Almonds Tarragona 14 to 15c.; Almonds, Ivica 14 to 15c.; Almonds, common 10 to 11c.; Almonds, hardshell 07 to 08c.; Walnuts, Grenoble, new 12 to 12½c.; Walnuts, French 10 to 10½c.; Cocoanuts per 100 $4.50 to $5; Filberts 9 to 10c.; Pecans 16 to 17c.; Peanuts 07 to 10c.

CANNED GOODS.

There is nothing doing in canned goods outside a small jobbing trade. The stocks are not large but ample for all requirements and holders are looking for a good business as soon as navigation opens.

GREEN FRUIT.

Green fruit remains steady with a fair jobbing trade doing at a slight reduction. We quote Valencia oranges at $3.25 to $3.50; Floridas $2.75 to $3.25, and bitter $3.00 to $3.50. Lemons $2.50 to $3.

APPLES.

Apples are unchanged with nothing notable to mention. We quote $2.50 to $3 for jobbing business. Evaporated are firmly held at 8 to 9c.; dried are dull and unchanged at 5 to 6c. As noted last week the fire in Chisholm's warehouse placed a lot of damaged stock on the market, but they do not find good demand.

HOPS.

Business since our report of a week ago has ruled quiet and failed to develop any feature of a special prominence. Reports from the American markets have not shown quite so cheerful a tone, and in New York a decline of 1 to 2c. has been suffered. There is still quite a round lot of last fall's shipment of German hops on hand, and as the brewers are well stocked they do not find ready sale. For the best Canadian hops an offer of 23c. is about the price. Pressed still move off in a jobbing way at 16c.

FISH.

For reasons already given the market wears a dull and heavy look, and although holders continue to hope that after to-morrow there will be an improvement in the demand there is as yet nothing to indicate that such will be the case. We quote : Herring, No. 1, per bbl., $5.25 to $5.30; lake trout, per half bbl., $4.25 to $4.50; sea trout, per bbl., $9.00 to $9.50; codfish, green, No. 1, per bbl., $5 to $5.25; do. No. 2, per bbl., $4.50 to $4.75; codfish, dried, per bbl., $5 to $5.05; salmon, B.C., per bbl., $13 to $13.50; do., Nfld., No. 1, per tee, $22.50 to $23; do. do., No. 2, per tee, $21 to $21.50; do. do., No. 3, per tee, $20 to $20.50.

PROVISIONS.

Foreign influences likely to affect the market has not of late been favorable to firm prices, and speculative buyers are deterred from embarking upon transactions of magnitude, while as usual at this season the consumptive demand is light. We quote : Canadian short cut, per brl. $16.50 to $17.00; mess pork, western, per brl. $16.00 to $16.50; short cut, western, per brl. $17 to $17.25; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c; bacon per lb. 9c. to 10c; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¼ to 8c.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

Transactions in cheese are now confined to jobbing lots with the grocers. Prices are very firm. Butter is fairly dealt with in a jobbing way. Business is altogether of a local character and on dairy butter the supply of which is hardly adequate to the demand, there is still a steady run but the interest displayed in creamery is very moderate. We quote :—Finest creamery, 23 to 24c.; Finest Townships, 18 to 20c.; Morrisburg and Brockville, 18 to 19c.; Finest Western, 16½ to 17½c.

EGGS.

The local egg market is very quiet at the moment. Dealers have cleaned out the stocks of limed pretty well during the past week and only one firm what can be called a large stock on hand. They are anxious to effect a clearance and are offering to-day at 14c. Fresh eggs are coming in more freely and finding a ready sale at 20c. The first car of American fresh eggs will arrive from St. Louis to-morrow and will be offered at about 18½c. The first car last year was received before the end of January. There is also a few small lots of extra fresh boiling stock selling at 25 to 28c.

GRAIN.

There is nothing new to note concerning the local grain market, the movement in all grains being small and unimportant. The stocks in store show a decrease of 21,613 wheat, 38,823 peas, 4,406 barley, and an increase of 34,224 oats, and 2,242 rye, compared with a week ago. Compared with a year ago there is an increase of 125,062 wheat, 141,907 peas, 60 oats, 19,719 barley, 211 rye, and a decrease of 11,493 corn. We quote:—No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04; peas, 73 to 74c. per 66 pounds; oats, 32c. to 34c. per 34 pounds ; corn, 72c. duty paid; feed barley, 45 to 46c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

The stocks of grain and flour in Montreal on the dates mentioned were as follows :—

	Feb. 27, 1892.	Feb. 20, 1892.	Feb. 28, 1891.
Wheat, bush	533,637	555,250	408,575

FATHERS AND SONS.

It is well known that with few exceptions fathers are adverse to training their sons to their own trade or calling, and the fact has repeatedly been alluded to. Various reasons have been given for this common feeling of fathers. An exchange says on this subject :

The only inference to be drawn is that a majority of men are engaged in callings not to their liking, either because there is not any money in it or because it is not agreeable to them. That is the natural conclusion, but the real fact of the matter is, the average man is a " kicker;" he wants something other than that which he has and without making any especial effort to meet the desire, grumbles at what he has.

We cannot agree with this view, and because the objection to training their sons in their own business is common among retail merchants, we will give what we believe to be the true reasons for its existence. In the first place, it will generally be found that men who have been born rich do not care much what occupations their sons take up. It is the man who has struggled hard for existence or for wealth, who is opposed to his sons following in his own footsteps, and it is because existence has been so hard and so searing to the conscience that he entertains that objection. The feeling is rather creditable to the parent. He wants to spare his offspring the troubles and trials that he himself has experienced, and the temptations to which he may have succumbed, but with a curious shortsightedness he imagines that if the boy adopts some other avocation he may escape those perils. There are, however, cases where the parent thinks his own occupation is degrading and desires a more honorable calling for his son. This is a form of self-delusion that is dying out among intelligent parents, we believe, because the perception of the fact that one business, provided it is an honest one, is not less honorable than another, is becoming more general every year as knowledge is more widely diffused among the mass of the people.

As regards the retail grocery business the disinclination of members of the trade to bring up their sons in that calling is to be regretted by all who are interested in everything that tends to lift the business to a higher plane, pecuniarily and morally. The business contains too many badly trained merchants, who are ignorant of the properties of many of the articles which they sell, and therefore become liable to impositions by salesmen, jobbers and manufacturers. These dealers, having to learn by bitter experience, are responsible for a good deal of the price-cutting that is indulged in, for the sale of adulterated goods to a considerable extent and for the abuse of the credit system. What these men learn after entering business in their own name, the grocer's son would be taught beforehand, perhaps with much other valuable information, and as a rule would be better fitted to engage in the business either on his own account, or with his parent, than the most carefully trained clerk would be if so fortunate as to be able to start for himself. This cannot, we think, be successfully disputed, for there are few men who would exercise as much care and patience in instructing a hired clerk as they would in educating their sons for the business. Therefore we trust that every grocer who is a father will quickly disabuse his mind of the notion that his boy can escape temptation, hard work or anxiety by turning his back on his father's trade, or that by entering some other business he can enjoy a more honorable means of support.—Merchant's Review.

SMALL MARGINS.

The conditions that have prevailed in the grocery and general merchandise market for a great many years, says an exchange, making it necessary for the manufacturers and merchants to figure on small margins, have more and more been affecting the hardware trade during the past few years, until now manufacturers of staple goods are satisfied with very small profits. The margins have been so low as to invite comment in nearly every weekly review of every distributing-center market in the country, and expectation has been alert as to the eventual rise in prices. The current number of The Iron Age points out the improbability of this result arriving in the near future.

The contracts taken for large quantities to be delivered months ahead, and in some cases covering the entire year, at prices which seem to barely cover cost, show that the manufacturers are disposed to forego all chances of an upward turn in values. The Age says that offers are known to have been made by manufacturers of their entire year's output, at a slight advance over cost, based upon an inspection of their books. An instance has come under our observation in which a manufacturer controlling his own raw material has offered another concern in the same line his surplus production of raw material at actual cost for a fixed time, based upon an examination of the cost sheets by a disinterested party. Concern No. 2 had been figuring on an addition to the works covering this point, but the scheme was promptly abandoned on receipt of such an offer. This condition of affairs indicates almost a revolution. Matters have been shaping for it for a long time, but only within the past few months has their full force been felt. The requirements of the country are now more than met in almost every line of iron and steel production, and it will take a very heavy increase in consumption to bring the demand up to anything like the supply. Manufacturers are losing hope that this will soon occur, hence their willingness to take such contracts as are above set forth.

Under these circumstances it becomes more and more obvious how vital it is to the trade as a whole that the small margin shall be protected, and we think we can forsee the time when the hardware trade, as has proved the case with the grocery and general mercnandise trade, will be compelled, for its own protection, to resort to organization, to prevent the cutting on smaller margins under which the trade will be carried on, for if the manufacturers are compelled to be satisfied with small margins, it cannot be long before the jobber and the retailer will find the same condition confronting them.—Ez.

Owing to the dull times, Thomas S. Armstrong, general storekeeper, Fergus, has placed his affairs in the hands of Henry Barber & Co., Toronto. His assets and liabilities are nominally equal at about $7,500.

W. L. Temple, tea merchant, has assigned to Osborne Blois. The liabilities are principally to English tea houses, several of whom are reported to have claims of from $5,000 upwards. The assets are largely covered by the bill of sale and mortgage to Mr. Herbert Harris.

H. J. Bray, sen., also in the wholesale fruit trade in Toronto, met his creditors. The assignment was made to George Edwards on a total liability of $4,000, principally with the view of realizing the assets of the business under a recent transfer to the debtor's son.

The insolvency of Gonee & Co., fruit and fish wholesalers, Colborne st, Toronto, has engaged the attention of their creditors at the office of George Edwards, to whom the assignment was made. The statement presented showed liabilities amounting to $4,000. The debtor made the offer of a cash composition of 20 cents on the dollar, but this was refused by the creditors and the assignee was instructed to wind up the estate.

WOMEN IN THE GROCERY TRADE.

It is noticed that the names of women are becoming more numerous among the business changes that are registered every week. Has the busy storeroom with its multitude of details to look after sufficient attraction to induce them to leave home for the counter? Probably a better solution would be furnished upon an investigation as to why women take upon themselves such arduous duties. In the majority of cases these women have succeeded their husbands in business, and we regret to add that it was in many cases because the latter had failed. There is a common law which makes the property of the wife and her earnings exempt from the husband's debts. Hence the frequent transfer of the business from husband to wife. The wife must take more or less interest in the business, and it may be said to her credit that she frequently not only pulls the establishment out of the financial straits into which it had drifted, but makes money. The number of women grocers is not cited to call the attention of the trade to the increase in failures, but rather as proof that a woman in some respects is peculiarly adapted to the business. Among the subscribers of the Grocer we note more than one hundred women who have been actively engaged in the trade for years and the success of many of them has been remarkable.

Among the many good qualities exercised by the woman in business is caution. In all her transactions she looks to absolute safety and can seldom be induced to take any chances that might imperil her business or her future. She is anxious to make money, but she is not over-ambitious like a man, and her conservatism keeps her inside the danger line. She is afraid of entanglements and business complications and is determined to avoid them. She jealously guards her credits and knows more about the financial standing and character of her customers in one day than a man could find out in a week with the aid of a lawyer. She is an excellent collector, because Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Smith fear a woman's tongue more than a man's threat. For well they know that the female grocer could blast all their pretentions in local circles by hinting to the neighbors that they were wearing silks and satins at her (the grocer's) expense. She is in business for the sole business of making her living and she engages in no hap-hazard operations where she might lose her foothold. Loss of her little capital appears to her as an irretrievable calamity and fully appreciates the helplessness of her situation in case of failure. The various schemes which tempt men to invest money in untried goods have no attraction for her and she seldom has capital tied up where it yields no profit.

Another advantage possessed by women is the fact that they seldom have expensive habits. They are contented with the amusements and pleasures that are furnished at home, and can therefore be relied upon to give their best thoughts to business. It can also be said in their favor that the financial stand on which women receive credit does not warrant the wholesale houses in giving credit to men. That she should be the recipient of such extra confidence and favors can only be accounted for on the grounds of an established record she has made for herself in the mercantile world.—Chicago Grocer.

WESTERN ASSURANCE CO.

ANNUAL MEETING.

The Forty-first annual meeting of the shareholders of the above Company was held at its offices in this city at noon yesterday.

Mr. A. M. Smith, President, occupied the chair and Mr. J. J. Kenny, Managing Director, was appointed to act as Secretary to the meeting.

The Secretary read the following

ANNUAL REPORT.

The Directors beg to submit herewith their Annual Report, showing the transactions of the Company for the past year, together with a statement of its Assets and Liabilities on 31st December last.

The Premium Income, it will be observed, was $1,754,262.25, after deducting the amount paid for re-insurance; and the receipts for interest on investments were $43,732.78.

Although no serious conflagrations have occurred during the year fire losses, both in Canada and the United States, have been unusually numerous and severe, bringing the ratio of losses to premiums considerably above the average of ordinary years.

In the Marine Branch the volume of business has been somewhat less than in 1890, but the year's transactions have resulted more satisfactorily.

While the profit balance of $40,120.67 is much less than that shown in the preceding annual balance sheet your directors feel that in view of the unfavorable results of the fire business for the year 1891 to companies generally there is cause for congratulation in the fact that the excess of income over expenditure with the balance at the credit of profit and loss account enabled them to pay two half-yearly dividends at the rate of ten per cent. per annum upon the paid-up capital without drawing upon the Company's ample reserve fund of $900,000. The amount estimated as necessary to reinsure or run off all existing risks is $578,654.19. Deducting this from the total surplus funds of the Company a net surplus of $325,527.17 is shown over capital and all other liabilities.

One important result from the generally adverse experiences in fire underwriting for the year 1891 has been the withdrawal of a number of companies from the business. The risks of these retiring companies have been assumed by other and stronger companies, so that in no case have the policy-holders been sufferers, while the terms on which the business has been taken over have in most instances been such as will permit the winding up of the companies without loss to stockholders. The natural effect of these withdrawals will be the concentration of the business among a smaller number of offices, and concerted action where necessary to place it upon a more satisfactory basis. These movements, with a return to a normal loss ratio, which may be reasonably looked for, must eventually result favorably to the companies remaining in the field.

A. M. SMITH, President.
J. J. KENNY, Managing Director.

Western Assurance Offices, Toronto, Feb. 16, 1892.

Auditors' Report.

To the President and Directors of the Western Assurance Company:

GENTLEMEN,—We hereby certify that we have audited the books of the Company for the year ending 31st December, 1891, and have examined the vouchers and securities in connection therewith and find the same carefully kept, correct and properly set forth in the above statement.

R. R. CATHRON,
JOHN M. MARTIN, F.C.A., } Auditors.

Toronto, Feb. 16, 1892.

In moving the adoption of the report the President said:

The Annual Report of the Directors, which has just been read, with its accompanying statements of the accounts of the Company, presenting as they do a clear synopsis of the past year's business and its results, render unnecessary any lengthened remarks or explanations from me. Compared with the figures of the preceding year you will have noticed a moderate and satisfactory gain in the net premium income, a considerable increase in the amount of losses incurred, and a marked reduction from the handsome profit balance which we were able to show as the result of our operations for the year 1890; and yet, notwithstanding this diminution in the profits on the business transacted last year, those of us who have watched from month to month the fire record of 1891 and have noted the inroads which in many instances it has made into the surplus funds which companies have accumulated in more prosperous years, cannot but feel that we are exceptionally fortunate in making so favorable a showing as is presented to you to-day. The Fire Insurance Companies the past year have proved a veritable "Waterloo," and in addition to winding up a number of smaller American companies we as Canadians must regret that it has resulted in the retirement of two of our own Companies, which have reinsured their risks with offices whose wider experience leads them to look beyond the records of such an exceptional year as the past one has proved.

The effect of this reduction in the number of competitors for business, judging from our own receipts thus far for the present year, is already being felt in the increased volume of premiums of the remaining companies and while in a business such as ours, subject to a large extent to elements beyond human control, it is impossible to forecast the probable results of any one year, we may safely rely upon the law of average asserting itself, and may fairly assume that by conducting our business on lines laid down by past experience, and adhering to a policy of just and liberal treatment of our insurers, we shall in the future, as we have heretofore, earn fair profits for our shareholders upon their capital.

A full consideration of the present conditions and prospects of the business, which I have briefly outlined, has led the directors to consider the question of increasing the capital stock of the company, and believing that such action will be advantageous at the present time in strengthening in proportion to the growth of its business, the financial position of a home institution which already stands high in public confidence, they have taken advantage of the present gathering of its shareholders to call a special meeting at the close of this regular meeting to approve, as required by the Act of Incorporation, of an additional issue of stock.

I cannot close without bearing testimony to the zeal and watchful care manifested by our Managing Director in conducting the business of the Company, and the efficient manner in which the other officers have fulfilled their respective duties during an unusually trying year, and expressing our appreciation of the active and loyal services of the Managers of our various branch offices and the agents of the Company generally throughout its wide field of operations.

Mr. George A. Cox, Vice-President of the Company, said:

In seconding the adoption of the report last year (when after paying a 10 per cent. dividend, we carried $75,000 to the reserve fund) I pointed out the necessity of providing in favorable years for less fortunate ones, such as the experience of all companies leads them to look for when fire losses exceed what may be regarded as an average ratio. The past year has been one to impress this lesson upon all companies. The experience of the "Western," however, I am glad to be able to add, has been more fortunate than a majority of companies operating in the same field. In Canada our loss ratio is (as it has been for several years past) below the average of all companies doing business here, while in the United States we compare favorable with the home and foreign companies which make returns to the New York Insurance Department. In the matter of expense in conducting business, our figures show that we are as low, if not lower, than most of the companies doing similar lines of business.

I quite concur in the President's expressions of regret at the winding up of some of our Canadian companies. It is a remarkable fact, however, that when an unsuccessful fire insurance company decides to give up business, its risks and its agents are readily assumed by some foreign corporation, and its stockholders, who get something beyond the market price for their stock, retire from the fire underwriting field, leaving the business to be carried on by the purchasing company through the same agents and usually under the same general manager as previously conducted it, but as Canadian institutions they cease to exist. I admit the necessity of foreign capital in fire insurance, but I believe there is also a field in this country for home companies, and I point with much satisfaction to the "Western" as evidence that a Canadian Company, under proper direction and management, can hold its own against all comers. Looking at its record for the five years preceding that embraced in this report, you find that during that term our total income was $8,175,293; that we paid losses amounting to $5,189,218; that our shareholders received in dividends $246,000, and that we have added to our Reserve Fund $240,000—not a bad showing for five years, and the general history of the Company for many years back shows equally favorable results.

I am glad that the Shareholders will have an opportunity of expressing an opinion upon the proposal to issue an additional $200,000 of capital, divided pro rata amongst the present Shareholders. It is a most opportune time, while some of our Canadian companies are retiring from the field, for the Shareholders of the "Western" to strengthen the position of our own Company, and to express their confidence that a well-managed Canadian Fire Company affords safe and profitable investment to its Shareholders.

At the last annual meeting, when we had an exceptionally favorable showing, I congratulated our Managing Director and his faithful and competent staff upon the results of the year, and I feel that there is even more reason for doing so upon the report now submitted, when the "Western" makes such a comparatively favorable showing at the close of a year that has been so disastrous to many companies. I have pleasure, Mr. Chairman, in seconding the adoption of the report.

On motion of Mr. G. R. R. Cockburn, M. P., seconded by Mr. David McGee, a cordial vote of thanks was passed to the President and Board of Directors for their services and attention to the interests of the company during the past year.

Messrs. John Stark and J. K. Niven, having been appointed scrutineers, the election of directors for the ensuing year was proceeded with, which resulted in the unanimous re-election of the old board, viz.: Messrs. A. M. Smith, George A. Cox, Hon. S. C. Wood, Robt. Beatty, A. T. Fulton, George McMurrich, H. N. Baird, W. R. Brock and J. J. Kenny.

At the close of the annual meeting, the question of increasing the capital stock of company to $1,200,000 was submitted to a special meeting of the shareholders and unanimously approved; the new stock ($200,000) to be issued at 25 per cent premium, and allotted to shareholders in the proportion of one share to every five held by them on 15th March next.

At a meeting of the Board of Directors held subsequently, Mr. A. M. Smith was re-elected President, and Mr. George A. Cox, Vice-President, for the ensuing year.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST,

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar-Refining.

The test by the Polariscope showed in yesterday s yield 99·90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

JOHN BAKER EDWARDS, P.L.D., D.C.L., F.C.S.,

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

Traders who sell fresh fish, oysters and other lines that have to be preserved in ice, ought to make a certainty and a specialty of having pure ice. In cities whose ice supply is apt to be from polluted waters, this is especially important. In Toronto the agitation against frozen sewage has been kept up so long and has been so earnestly carried on by the advocates of better sanitary conditions, that nearly everybody is more or less alive to the danger that lurks in a lump of bay ice. That general knowledge cannot but check business. There are people, and many of them, who forego their liking for oysters merely because they are mistrustful of the source of the ice. It is the same way with fresh fish. Just now when Lent is on it is material that this drawback to trade should be removed. It would pay retail grocers to make a specialty of keeping pure ice and and advertise it freely in their shop-fronts and elsewhere. An idea recommended by a physician writing in one of the morning papers is that retailers who keep goods for which ice is necessary, should obtain Lake Simcoe ice and get from the medical health officer a certificate of its source and its purity. Those who have the enterprise to do this thing may depend upon making it pay, for there is a wide constituency of consumers who are looking around for some grocery store where they can be assured that pure ice is used on oysters, fresh fish, etc. More could be made out of ice as a special advertisement than anything else just now. Retailers should make a point of getting their summer supply from untainted sources, and having its purity properly certified. Butter and similar perishable commodities would sell at better prices in the hot weather if the ice had the right brand on it.

A. E. P., whose letter appears in another column, writes very sensibly upon the question of calling for orders. He upholds the custom both in practice and in theory. In his view it is not a necessary evil, but is a normal condition of trade in cities. He does not consider that more bad debts are likely to be contracted at the consumers' houses than at the grocer's store, rightly holding that the grocer is more likely to select his customers when he goes for them than when they come to him, and that debts are more easily collected when calls are made than when they are not. An especially good point is made in favor of calling for orders in the claim that it tends to keep trade from concentrating upon one or two streets, and causing exorbitant demands for rent from the owners of stores on those streets. There undoubtedly is that tendency, to which the delivery wagon, the telephone and the street car very greatly minister. There has to be something to offset this tendency, and the custom of calling for orders appears to do it. But the question is one that will bear scrutiny and it is intended that it shall be very fully canvassed in our columns. Let others speak.

It is undoubtedly an arbitrary thing for any assemblage of men to constitute themselves an authority in prices, and to assume the power of prescribing the margin of other men's liberty as salesmen. The only legitimate authority there is is the resultant of supply and demand. Any attempt to supersede that requires widespread and genuine unanimity among those who control the supply or the demand. Such an unanimity it is hard to effect. It is seldom attempted on the part of the demand because it is seldom necessary; it rarely succeeds on the part of any controlling agency in the supply, and for the same reason. The eagerness of sellers to do business usually makes the one sort of combine unnecessary and the other impossible. It is a noteworthy fact that prices are lower since combines became the popularly condemned thing they are. In the grocery trade particularly it is true that neither the supply nor the demand holds the balance of power over prices. The centre of gravity lies in that body of traders who are determined above all things to sell goods. It is these who are the arbiters of prices, and it is largely to them the public owes it that everything is so cheap to-day. It is also to them that trade is to credit a great part of the disaster that overtakes it every year. Their influence is on the whole a baneful one. The public, however, will never cry out against cheap goods, no matter what the consequences may be. It is not the right or the wrong of an influence in prices that the people consider. The question with them is, What side is it on? If it is for cheap goods it is desirable; if it is for higher prices it is wrong. That is the sort of morality that too commonly exclaims against combines. Like a good many other things, combines have to be looked at individually, and each is right or wrong of itself, not on account of its nature as a combine. The desire to do a stirring trade appears to be supplanting the money-making instinct, which, however it may be declaimed against, must be deemed one of the most steadying influences in trade. So long as that instinct could be preserved without recourse to combines, trade flourished and failures were few.

THE DISCRETION OF TRAVELLERS.

A travelling salesman needs to be a very self-sufficient man in these times. He often is called upon to act before other men would have time to think, and to use his own judgment where others would be advised. The work he is in clearly calls for special talents, and the wide-awake jobber who needs a man for the road knows just what parts the appointee to the position should have. A man may have excellent abilities, may be active and strictly upright, but may not possess all the requirements for success on the road. He must have, in addition to a suitable business training, a a degree of self reliance that is not called for in the house salesman. It is his capacity for doing business without the guidance of a principal or head of a department that is his strong distinguishing point. Unlike the house salesman he can not, when confronted with a problem, repair to a superior for instruction; he has to be his own mentor. He is hemmed in by what the retailer wants him to do, what he would do himself in the given circumstances and what he feels that his house would do. The step he usually takes may be called the average result of these influences, and gets as close as possible to the satisfying of all of them. It requires judgment, self-restraint, diplomacy, to get the traveller successfully through some of the situations he is placed in.

It makes his task much harder when prices are irregular to know when he is being "bluffed," and to know when the alleged lower prices of rivals are genuine ones. When to resist and when to yield are hard questions very often. Just now, for example, there is endless perplexity for the traveller in the rumors and the facts of cutting. It is hard for him to know when he is leading or following in a cutting campaign. Yet the brunt of determining has to fall upon the traveller alone. He must have the promptness and decision to decline or close an order that is offered on some debateable ground. There is a heavy responsibility upon him, quite as heavy as upon one of the principals of his house. Selling goods, realizing a profit and following a conservative course in prices are very hard things to reconcile; the traveller is called upon probably more than anyone else to reconcile them. This training cannot but serve him in good stead, and that is the main reason why so many men who were formerly travellers are among the chiefs of commerce to-day.

Anyone whose range of observation extends over the past fifteen years must be struck with the wonderful expansion in that time of the purchasing power of a dollar in the commodity of sugar. It is not longer ago than that that retailers could sell white sugar at 11c. per lb., and 10 lbs. for a dollar was a cut price. If not within that time, at least not much longer ago, the regular rate was 11 lbs. for a dollar. To-day there are retailers to be found, and there is no lantern necessary for the search, who sell 22 lbs. of granulated sugar for a dollar. In the meantime wages have gone up.

There have been economic reasons, bearing on the production of sugar, for this decline in prices. The extension of the area of cultivation of beet root is one of these; another is the evolution of the machinery used in manufacture. Tariff changes have also played a part in the reduction. The effect of these changes upon the demand became in turn a factor, as increased consumption glided from an effect into a cause of cheapness. But the mainstay of low prices, that which has been their steady support since the sugar trade amounted to anything, has been the anxiety of dealers to sell sugar. The removal of retailers' profit ranks high as one of the causes of cheap sugar. Wholesalers now add their mite to the general good, and to-day a dollar is convertible into 22 lbs. of the very best granulated sugar made on this continent. What need have we for any such state of society as Bellamy looks backward to, where the mere cost of production and transportation is to determine the price, and profit is exorcised from the body politic and commercial? The refiners of course do make a little money yet out of the production of sugar, but if two or three more of them could be brought into the business they might be persuaded to give up their profits for the good of the public.

So much does the tendency run towards selling at an absolute loss, that the question What is sugar sold for? becomes pertinent. Are there any people still selling it who are under the delusion that it is intended to make money on it? If there are, it is well that they should amend their ideas on this matter. There appears to be a higher, more purely philanthropic object than this in the business, and it evidently is, to bring cheap sugar to the masses. This idea of making money on sugar is altogether too sordid, and so the consumer gets 22 lbs. of granulated for a dollar.

There was some hope, when the duty was removed from sugar, that the trader would endeavor to keep upon his prices a little deposit of profit, which he would not permit the rough collision of competition to shake off. But it was not so. The prodigal retailer would give all up to his customers. When the wholesale traders sorrowfully dispensed with their margin, the retailers let go of it too, and now the consumer could not get sugar laid down direct from the refinery—if the refiner would sell to him on the same terms as to a wholesaler—at any lower price than he can buy from the majority of retailers. It seemed natural to expect, when it became possible for the retailer to sell at 5c. per lb. and make a little, that he would not go below that price. Everybody felt that the danger point was cleared when the retailer could buy at 4½c. But it seems that 5c. is not a stopping point for people who wish first and foremost to make sales. The retail sugar trade appears to be past redemption.

LEAP FROG ON THE ROAD.

The "advised" visit is rarely on time. The calendar and the map of a given route may be gone over in joint conference between the head of the house and the traveller who is to cover that route, places and dates may be matched, and notice sent to each trader in that particular circuit, of the day when the traveller is to call. But he doesn't call on that date, at least hardly ever. The reason is, that he departs from the course staked out for him and goes chasing after other travellers whose whereabouts he hears of. That is what deranges the plans of which the advice cards are tokens. A, representing one house is in a certain town to-day and learns that B, the representative of a rival house is to be in another place the day after to-morrow. Two or three towns intervene between where A now is and the place where B is to be, and A is booked for every one of those towns before he is to go to the more distant place. That however, does not dissuade him from leaping over the intermediate towns and making his way to the place where B is heading for, and getting to that place to-morrow, or one day ahead of B. If he can leave the trade of that town in the condition of a squeezed orange for B, he feels that he has amply recompensed his house for the extra expense necessitated by retracing his steps to take in the omitted towns. But there is no saying when he will take in the omitted towns. He is like a luminary without a fixed orbit, and prides himself upon his unexpectedness. His aim is to checkmate his rival, not to carry out the plans of his house. A general does not plume himself more upon the fulness of his intelligence as the enemy's movements than does the traveller upon his thorough knowledge of what his rival's plans are. All this requires sharp observation, alertness and promptness, but there is equal room for the application of the same qualities to the business of selling goods. There is such a thing as becoming so deeply absorbed in the game of forestalling competitors as to neglect the real objects of travelling. As some men are cleverer at checkers than others, so some travellers are cleverer at effecting combinations and bringing several points into line where a series of jumps can be made, each one over a rival. But it is not always the man who gets ahead of his opponents that sends in the largest sheaf of orders. The best travellers on the road are men who keep the even tenor of their way as "advised."

The trouble with this leap-frog business is that it disappoints the retailer. Traders frequently complain to wholesalers that, relying upon the "advice" of the traveller's visit, they allowed the travellers of other houses to go through without giving them in order. In this way opportunities to make an advantageous purchase probably were let go by, because the notice of the traveller's visit was depended on. In some instances the six weeks, or whatever other set time the traveller is to be on the road, slip away before he has had time to catch all the places he has missed. In one case, a retail merchant reports that he had not been called upon for a year by the traveller of a house he dealt quite extensively with.

THE TORONTO BISCUIT AND CONFECTIONERY CO.

"A threefold cord is not quickly broken."

The gentlemen whose photos appear in this issue of THE GROCER, are the ones who comprise the Toronto Biscuit and Confectionery Company. They are all young men, in the prime of life, full of energy and push. Mr. Booth was born in Toronto in 1864, and was educated at the old Upper Canada College. Previous to forming this company, he was partner and bookkeeper of the Yorkville and Carlton Brick Manufacturing Co. Mr. Henry C. Fortier was born in the old town of Amherstburg in 1854, and was educated at the school in that town, at L'Assumption College at Sandwich, and upon coming to Toronto in 1870 took a course at the old Mechanics' Institute. His first employment was with the grocery house of Spry & Murdoch, 135 Yonge street, then with the Toronto Tea Company, managed by Wm. Adamson. He was afterwards four years in the Toronto post office, and six years in the Post-office Inspector's Offices, both here and in Barrie. Mr. Peter was born at Canterland, Montrose, Scotland, and was educated at Montrose Academy, and afterwards at Madras College, St. Andrews. Leaving college he entered the Aberdeen Town and County Bank at Inverurie, and then was for a year with James Asher & Sons, wholesale grocers, Aberdeen. Coming to Canada nine years ago he entered the wholesale grocery house of Smith & Keighley, Toronto, and was with them seven years. He has travelled from one end of Canada to the other, and has several times made successful trips to the North-west, both for Smith & Keighley and for his own company.

These three young men bought out, one year ago, the old business of Wm. Hessin, and after thoroughly overhauling the place from cellar to top storey, launched out into what has proved to be a very large and successful biscuit, confectionery, jam and jelly trade. They employ about one hundred hands, and have steadily increased their business from month to month, until now they are able to dispose of more than they can turn out. Mr. Booth is the financial head, and has charge of the office, and through his hands pass all orders coming in from the travellers. Mr. Fortier has charge of the manufacturing and the warehouse, and Mr. Peter represents the Company west of Toronto.

It is easy to account for the wonderful success that has crowned their efforts, when the training that these young men received previous to their forming this Company is considered. Mr. Booth is a thorough accountant, and the other two having a good knowledge of the grocery trade, with which their business is largely done, are able to bring their experience into practical use. The Company is represented in Hamilton by Mr. Cyrus King, who is meeting with success far beyond their expectations. Messrs. Martin and Robertson are their agents in British Columbia, Messrs. Tees & Persse in Winnipeg, and Messrs. Newman & DeWolf in Halifax, Nova Scotia. They have two travellers constantly on the road east, one north, two west and two in this city.

Their soda biscuits are of an unusually high grade. They manufacture almost every known biscuit and cake, and their confectionery, jams and jellies are known far and wide as being only first-class. In the manufacturing of jams and jellies they differ some what from others in this line, inasmuch as they only make one grade and that guaranteed an absolutely pure one. The building at present occupied by this Company has already proved too small, and they hope shortly to occupy newer and larger premises. In conversation with the gentlemen of this Company it was learned that they opened and closed their own premises, one of the firm always being down at 6:45 a.m. They personally attend to the buying, manufacturing, shipping, and in fact every department is carefully watched. They employ only first-class skilled workmen, and this as well tends to make their business a successful one. They are well liked by the business men with whom they come in contact, and have the confidence and respect of all in their employ.

THE HAMILTON BOARD OF TRADE.

The Hamilton Board of Trade at its meeting on the 3rd inst resolved :—"That pending the settlement of the issue between Canada and Newfoundland, this board is in hearty sympathy with the resolution passed by the Dominion Millers' Association, suggesting the arrangement of a modus vivendi whereby products might be exchanged between the two countries until diplomacy has procured a permanent settlement, and that Mr. W. B. Robson be appointed a delegate to wait on the Government at Ottawa in connection with the deputation from other Boards of Trade and the Millers' Association." A committee was appointed to consider the insolvency bill as drafted by the Montreal Board of Trade, and to report at the next meeting. The council of the board was empowered to ask Parliament for an amendment to the charter so as to enable the council to consider applications for membership before they come up at the board meetings. The question of bonusing manufacturers was fully discussed, and it was resolved :—"That this Board of Trade recommend that all Boards of Trade in Ontario be asked to co-operate with this board in obtaining legislation to prevent any municipality from granting any bonus to manufacturers."

THE NEWFOUNDLAND TARIFF.

It is currently reported around the lobbies that steps have been taken by the Government which it is hoped will lead to a satisfactory settlement of the dispute now pending between the Government of Newfoundland and the Dominion without compromising the dignity of either. It is understood that our Government propose a reversion to the condition of affairs as they existed up to 1889, and to again allow Newfoundland fish to enter Canada free of duty, provided that the Executive Council of Newfoundland reduce the tariff on Canadian products imported into that colony to the figure at which they stood a few months ago, and allow Canadian fishermen to obtain free bait like the fishermen of the United States. This measure is adopted pending an effort which is to be made by a conference at London between Sir Charles Tupper, acting on behalf of the Dominion, and Hon. Mr. Harvey, for the Government of Newfoundland, these two gentlemen to be assisted in their deliberations by a gentleman representing the Imperial authorities. The hope is strongly expressed that a satisfactory agreement will be reached in the matter of the Bait Act and other pending matters. It is confidently expected that the Newfoundland Government will readily accede to the proposals to revert to the statu quo, and in the event of the duties on Canadian produce being reduced the intimation will be decidedly welcomed by Canadian millers, who have hitherto done a large business in the exportation of flour to the island colony.

PATRON COERCION DOESN'T WORK

March 7th, 1892.

EDITOR CANADIAN GROCER.

SIR,—I cannot speak too highly of your paper. I welcome it every week and read it with profit, and think every grocer and general merchant in the Dominion should read it.

I have been pleased to read the articles on the Patrons of Industry and would like to offer a suggestion. I think wholesalers should refuse to sell to any retailer who supplies them at their fixed price, and retailers should refuse to buy from any wholesaler who does sell to them. If it would not be too much trouble to you, I would recommend retailers, when they have satisfactory proof that a man is doing the Patron trade, to forward his name and place of business to you and you send it to the mercantile agency, and when wholesalers would see it there, let them refuse to sell to that trader, and when a wholesaler is found to sell to any of these Patron dealers, let the other wholesalers or any person else who is acquainted with the fact, report it to you, and you give their name to the retailers, and let those retailers refuse to patronize them unless they quit selling Patron dealers. I am in a country place, a farming community where they nearly all belong to the Patrons. The lodge has been started only about a month here, and they say if I will not sell at their prices they will build a store and run me out. I tell them, "All right, when I cannot make a living at storekeeping I will start at some other business, but to bind myself to show them my invoices and sell at their prices I never will."

Wishing THE GROCER every success,

I remain, yours truly,

COUNTRY MERCHANT.

CALLING FOR ORDERS.

OTTAWA, March 2nd, 1892.

MR. EDITOR,—"Calling for Orders" is a source of evil, so say a number of your correspondents. None of the opinions I have formed on any subject relating to the prosperous carrying on of a retail grocery shop have ever been so diametrically opposed. I firmly believed that the system of calling for orders was advantageous, and some of my reasons for so believing I herewith submit. I speak from the standpoint of a retail grocer only.

A correspondent says that it means an extra expense of from 8 to 10 per cent. Our experience is that it is cheaper, as clerks can do much more work. To illustrate : From 9 a.m. to noon on Monday a man can take orders from ten to fifteen, or more families for one week's groceries. He could not wait on the same number of customers in the shop. In the afternoon he takes orders in another direction of the city, and leaves his orders to be put up by the clerks, who can also do the local or transient trade. For merchants who do a farmers' trade in Ottawa Tuesday is a market day. During the forenoon the driver delivers the previous day's order, and the salesmen are left free to attend to their rural patrons. Cannot a given number of employes do more work in a day's time under that system, than if every customer was waited upon over the counter?

The same correspondent also credits the order customer with 70 per cent. of the bad debts. It has been the reverse with us. We find it much easier to collect the order customer when he is slow in his payments, owing to the very fact that we call on him at his home. Besides, any prudent grocer will take good care not to call on a dishonest customer for orders. In the shop it is always hard to refuse credit. We have not the trouble in Ottawa, however, of calling on deadbeats for orders. Distance is no obstacle to them. They are all good walkers, good talkers, and besides we have a perfect and rapid system of electric railway, so that it is very easy for them to reach us—and they do so. It is the honest customer that we have to follow, for as a rule he buys from the nearest grocer.

It is no disgrace to call for orders on customers who live at a distance. All will admit that it is a great convenience for the customer, and I for one believe it to be a convenience and a saving for the merchant.

Manufacturers and wholesale merchants have their travellers, but the retailers must not have any, even though it may be profitable to have them. I cannot see any logic in that. Why should the retail grocer be "disgraced" by calling on these same manufacturers', wholesalers', or any other families for an order for groceries? Your correspondent cites the case of a grocer being threatened with legal proceedings "if he persisted in calling at a certain house for orders." Such grocers are a disgrace to the trade—not the system. Calling for orders also prevents the centralization of business into one or two of the principal streets of a city or town, and consequently hinders grocers' profits all going towards paying exorbitant rents, and practically have their business at the mercy of the landlords. It also enables the smaller trader, who is doing business off the main streets, to build a trade, and compete on even terms with his wealthier and better located competitor.

To enjoy the full advantages of the calling for order system, a grocer must look to the interests of his customers as well as to his own. He must handle nothing but first-class goods, and make his patrons share in any of the profits he derives from close buying, or otherwise. When a grocer has goods that he can sell at a bargain, he ought to offer it to his customers and not wait until they are asked for. By so doing he will earn the confidence of his clients, who will generally be satisfied with his prices, and his way of doing business. Yours, A. E. P.

THROWN OUT OF A JOB.

Joe's envelope said simply:

The house regrets it can no longer offer you employment, but its reasons do not hinge upon your competency, and we take occasion to thank you for good work for us, wishing you well.

Joe thought to hide the message from John as he passed out—John had worked at his elbows for months—but he didn't. John followed him out and said:

"Stout heart, old fellow. You'll have a better job in a week. If I can do you a favor call on me. My turn next, I imagine."

Joe walked the street for hours, then went home to his wife and babies not less surely years older than when he had left them in the morning. He has fixed his purpose and will hew to it. He takes the usual trinkets to the children, a trifle of some sort to his wife, and gives her, as is his rule, the week's earnings. Then he acts for the first time in his life—he romps and carouses with Flora until she believes he is as much a child as herself, and his wife watches it all from her sewing table and wonders if she was ever as happy in the old courting days as she is now.

And Joe's heart is heavy under it all, for he determines that they shall not know of his bad luck until he has another job. He is hurt, humiliated, repulsed—he feels that the house has clipped him off because it could spare him more easily than any one of the hundred odd others that it has retained.

"But that little wife sitting there with her head full of belief in me, musn't know—she must believe me all I seem to be."

He looks for work ten hours a day for a week and doesn't find it. Saturday he pawns his watch for a weeks wages and carries it home, telling them that his watch had been stolen from him, but that he had a clue to the thief, and that Inspector Byrnes would catch him in a few days. He says to himself that fate stole it from him, but he keeps up the play bravely and with fortitude answers the evening queries of the home ones about whether they have found the watch The next two weeks are tided over by selling the building and loan stock. Then he borrows another week's pay of a friend.

Every morning he starts "to work" at the regular hour; every evening he returns. They go to the theatre; they buy some needed and long-promised clothes; they pay their regular missionary money and church fees—for Joe is playing a desperate hand now, but, with an insane sort of coolness. Something asks him over and over again every day: "Where will it end?" But Joe just sets his lips a little harder and don't reply, even in thought.

His encyclopedia goes next. He loans it to a friend down at the office, so he tells them at home. Joe can't eat heartily this week. He watches his wife's and children's lightheartedness something like a brute would do—stoically unmoved. He tells Amy to drink his cup of tea; he has no appetite, and don't want it. Then he is for the first time in his life affected with Satan's specially exported article of disease—insomonia. He sits for hours watching his family as they sleep, and he feels a heavy weight slowly setting upon his brain that he cannot understand the meaning of.

Next day he finds another position, and his wife doesn't understand why he gives way so completely for the first time in his life and cries like a child while telling her of it.

There are just a few Joes in this world—not too many. Clarence Harney tells his wife about it as soon as he gets home. He is sure he knew the infernal job wouldn't hold out long anyhow. Plenty more, though—you just have to have a little gall; and next day Clarence has another job. A little less pay, to be sure, "but then," he argues, "it's only for a week or so - I'll strike a better one the first thing you know. You don't know me—not this year."

Jim Burton, the clerk, loses his job. He pitches into the whole family and tells them that there must be no more money spent for anything at all. "Understand? The goodness only knows when you will get any more from me, so make this last as long as it will." He goes down town, gets a job, tells them at home that he has not yet found one, and so spends the entire pay for two weeks on himself, the while ostensibly searching wildly for work, and making the home ones pinch and worry with the lessening cash. Then at the critical moment he suddenly "finds work," and tells them he had to take it at $7 a week or nothing, when he really receives $12. Jimmie's friends down town call him "smooth."

Harris Russell, who writes shorthand, loses a job because he is a bad speller. He studies up on his spelling, answers advertisements, gets a few encouraging replies, and, after moving to a cheaper room once and going it for a week on a diet of crackers and milk—occasionally a nickel's worth of hot waffles—he gets another place at $1 a week more salary, and determines that he will not flounder on the same old reef a second time. Harris is an average boy—a typical case.

Emmons Holman, bookkeeper, learns that he is to be dispensed with soon, so very dignifiedly "resigns." He tells his friends that the firm bucked against it awfully, but that they couldn't keep him—that they offered shorter hours and a big raise, but that it was all no good. He knew what he was about. It is safe to admit that he did.

Ernest Jenkins is discharged. No friends. Can get no work. Starves three days. The river.—Interstate Grocer.

LAZENBY & SON.

In this issue a full page advertisement appears that is worthy of more than a passing notice, emanating as it does from one of the oldest houses dealing with Canada.

Messrs. E. Lazenby & Son, who like many other great establishments sprang from but small beginnings, the business having originated early in the last century under the guidance of "Mrs. Elizabeth Lazenby," owe their great success and almost world-wide reputation to the faithful adherence of the firm to the original watchword which still occupies the foremost place in all their manufactures, viz., the statement "that all goods packed by us are guaranteed absolutely unadulterated and our name is only attached to goods of the choicest description."

At no time in their long career have they allowed any departure from this watchword, and the testimonials published with the advertisement go far to show the satisfactory results that have ensued.

From a retail shop in Portland Place, London, (and which is still maintained) the business has grown to such large proportions that now four great establishments are required to carry on the work of packing. With Quaker-like simplicity this firm have relied entirely on the quality of their preparations for the extension of their trade, and if it were not that they had so far departed from the traditions of the house as to appoint resident agents in Canada, Australia and the United States, a move rendered necessary by the great increase in the demand for their preparations, it is justly questionable whether this should have had the honor of being the first publication in Canada to publish so extended an advertisement.

A description of the various premises occupied by this firm would furnish material for a most interesting article, but space does not permit of more than a cursory notice at present.

The offices and principal factory are situated on Trinity street, and like everything connected with the establishment are perfect models of neatness and cleanliness.

The office proper occupies a handsome building that was originally built as a chapel, but which has long since been so changed and enlarged that the outside walls are the only remainder of its original use, and even these, so far as the windows are concerned, give but a faint idea of what the building was.

The entire block that originally surrounded the chapel has been built up, while large cellars extend underneath the whole of it, but long ago, with all the additions, the premises were found too small, and additional room was procured near by, where the pickle factories are situated, together with store houses for a portion of the material required within the past few years, and another large block of land on Grimscott street was obtained and is covered with new buildings. It is here that the largest store houses are situated, as well as the soup factory, and thousands of pounds worth of unmanufactured material are kept continually in reserve,

The scrupulous care with which everything used by Messrs. Lazenby is handled, and the poor or defective goods discarded, is not the least striking feature of this model establishment.

The business is still conducted by persons of the same name as its originators, an unusual circumstance in old English houses where the title is often maintained while no person of the name may be connected with it.

For upwards of fifty years, this firm have been shipping to Canada and the growth of their trade, as before stated, necessitated the appointment of a resident agent from whom we learn that the actual imports to Canada of Lazenby & Son's preparations has increased upwards of 75 per cent. during the past two years, a growth almost entirely due to the great excellence of their preparations, especially their pickles, for they have hitherto followed the same conservative course here as elsewhere, and given newspapers but little opportunity of proving the great advantages of judicious advertising. We predict a much greater increase during the coming season.

LE DANSK.

A new substitute for butter under the above name is being introduced into England by a M. Pellevin of Paris. It is said that it appears to possess the merit of being wholesome as well as economical. Its manufacture has just been begun at large works which have been erected at Southampton, and which were recently opened. The basis of "Le Dansk" is the fat obtained from freshly slaughtered cattle, which is first converted into oleomargarine and afterward treated and made into "Le Dansk."

The process consists in first reducing the fat to small pieces of uniform size in special machines, and then melting it at a temperature of 50dg. Centigrade. It is then transferred in a liquefied condition into water-racketed tanks, in which it is kept for about two hours and a half at the same temperature. After this it is drawn off into shallow vessels, where it remains for 36 hours at a temperature of 32dg. Centigrade, during which time it assumes a crystalline condition.

The product now consists of oleo and stearine, and these are separated by means of hydraulic presses, the oleo being pressed out and the stearine remaining in the press cloths. The oleo is then placed in churns with certain proportions of new milk and oil and some pure butter, and the ingredients are churned for 50 minutes. The contents of the churns are then removed and cooled in iced water, and the margarine is afterward placed into mixing machines. Here it is salted and thoroughly incorporated, and afterward packed in boxes and baskets for the trade. —National Provisioner.

The early closing movement went into force in Kingston on Monday night. The hour is 9 o'clock, but several of the corner groceries kept open till 10. The boot and shoe trade did not close, as some few firms refused to sign.

Mr. C. H. Peebles, grocer, who has done business at 39 McNab street north, Hamilton, for the past 10 years, has removed to 31 McNab street north, a few doors south of old stand, and has now one of the finest grocery establishments in the province.

The Toronto Ratepayers' Association met on Tuesday night, and among other things discussed the bill now before the Ontario Legislature to relieve retail businesses from taxation. A resolution was passed asking the Attorney-General to withhold legislation on the business tax bill.

Mr. S. O. Leonard, of Kingsford's Oswego Starch, paid his monthly visit to Ontario this week. He says the reduction in prices of Canadian starches has not affected the sale of Kingsford's. He does not think it likely that any change will be made in their prices.

The Patrons of Industry stores are becoming less numerous throughout Canada. There were twenty-four, if not more, in existence recently, carrying all classes of goods, and from reports it seems that eighteen of the twenty-four have succumbed to the inevitable.

Hon. C. H. Tupper has introduced a bill in the House of Commons to place the lobster fishery under license, and to prevent explosives from being used to kill any marine life but that of whales, seals and porpoises. It also increases the penalties for poisoning fish. It includes in seizure for illegal fishing the boat used.

Sundays a gang of cursing, swearing rowdies can stand four deep around a corner store. No uniformed far-downer tells them in imported accents "to move an now." Week days the occupant of the same store would be jerked to the police court if a barrel of apples over lapped by a hairsbreadth the eighteen inch limit.—Telegram.

A circular has been issued to the members of the Guild reminding them of their agreement with MacDonald & Tuckett, the tobacco manufacturers. This means that they agree to handle no other manufacturers' goods. Some of them had forgotten this and allowed other manufacturers to place their goods in the wholesale houses on sale.

The Winnipeg City Council and Board of Trade are now holding conferences with regard to more equally adjusting the municipal taxation. It is proposed to place a large tax on banks, commission men representing eastern houses there, and insurance agents. There is a very vigorous opposition to the proposals, however.

Mr. H. C. McLean, representing THE CANADIAN GROCER and other trade journals published by the J. B. McLean Co., was in the city several days last week. It is a credit to represent such well edited and handsomely printed journals as those in which the McLeans are interested. The spring issue of their dry goods paper was unusually attractive.—American Grocer.

The council of the Winnipeg Board of Trade met on Monday, and the president laid before the meeting the report of the committee appointed to draft instructions to the delegates who are to represent the board at the congress of boards of trade and chambers of commerce of the British empire which is to meet in London, England, on the 29th of June next. The report indicates rather strongly that no imperial federation is desired. The necessity of emigration and colonization is largely dealt with, and it is pointed out that the colonies want a system of tariff discrimination by Great Britain against grain and food products of foreign nations.

The annual meeting of the Canadian Canned Goods Packers' Association will be held at the Walker House, Toronto, Wednesday, March 16, at 2 p. m. A larger attendance than ever before is expected, as there has been an increase in the number of canneries in Ontario and Quebec during the past few months. It is not likely that any attempt will be made to fix prices. Arrangements will be made, however, for the collection of statistics of pack and sales at regular intervals, during the busy season. These statistics enable the members to guage their pack and thus prevent over production. It is likely that a deputation will be appointed to ask the Government to remove the duty on peaches.

THE SUGAR WAR.

The sugar war is still going on, and some of the Upper Canada people are down here taking a look at things in general. Among those in the city are Messrs, Stuart, of Hamilton, and Davidson of Toronto, both wholesale grocers. Mr. Ed. A. Wills, secretary of the Toronto Board of Trade, is also in the city. Contrary to a report in an evening paper, there was no meeting of the refiners, or even of the Grocers' Guild, but one is expected to be held. Some of the wholesale houses who have been said to be selling sugar at "slaughter prices" deny the impeachment, while others admit it. As one wholesaler remarked yesterday, "Even if they were selling at such prices, the retailer and his customer get the benefit of it."—Montreal Gazette.

A despatch says: A number of the wholesale grocers held a secret meeting in Montreal on Saturday night. There they met Messrs. Davidson & Stuart, the two wholesalers from the west. It is understood that an effort is being made to form another combine stronger than the last one, by which the offending wholesale firms which have caused the present trouble will be squeezed out altogether, but apparently the wholesalers are finding some difficulty in arriving at any amicable understanding.

The trader who pays his way must sell at a profit, and cannot afford to cut below others in the same line.

TRASHY TEA AT A DISCOUNT.

Several local wholesale grocers, possibly more of them than the Bulletin is aware of, have been using their influence to educate retailers up to the wisdom of handling a better class of tea than they have dealt to consumers for some time past. It is to be regretted that efforts in this direction are not rewarded as they deserve, since a great many retailers have firm convictions of their own about everything connected with a grocery store, and not only decline to get out of old ruts, but display partiality to methods that may yield the greatest profit even though the object sought be attained by departure from straight and narrow lines. Some wholesalers, however, state that progress in what may be termed the educational campaign in teas in encouraging, and that numerous customers of the more progressive and conscientions kind are purchasing a larger percentage of the better grades of tea at present than they have bought for some time past. This remark is not intended to convey the impression that high grades are taken to the exclusion of inferior kinds, or that the latter are given the cold shoulder. The plain, simple fact is that many enterprising retailers, acting upon the suggestion of jobbers' salesmen, have induced customers to take at a few cents extra cost per pound a palatable article, and one that would leave less cause for dissatisfaction, in the place of an article that seldom pleased but frequently led to more or less serious complaint. That there is room for a great deal more missionary work in the same direction goes without saying, but it is gratifying to learn that, in these times of sharp competition, efforts in the right direction are being made. At present cost the retailer is certainly in a position to take greater interest in holding and attracting trade by dropping some of the miserable stuff that is turned over the counter and inducing customers to take tea that is fit to drink.—N. Y. Daily Commercial Bulletin.

The Ontario Government has issued letters patent for the incorporation of the Strathroy Canning & Preserving Company, (limited) with a capital stock of $50,000 in 500 shares, the incorporators being John Peter Dunn, James Carruthers Hegler, Mrs. Agnes Dunn and Mrs. Lizzie Alice Hegler, all of Ingersoll, and Thomas N. Dunn, of London.

The Department of Inland Revenue has decided to prosecute to the full extent of the law all persons engaging in illicit trade in tobacco. The department in the past has endeavored to secure an observance of the law by the imposition of mitigated penalties and the confiscation of the goods, but now, after mature consideration, it has been decided in future to punish such infractions of the law to the full extent provided by the Act.

TORONTO MARKETS.

TORONTO, March 10, 1892.

GROCERIES.

Upon a market where everything is in favor of the buyer, it would be strange that trade should make no progress. Retailers this week have been taking advantage of the easy prices more than since the depression began, if exception be made for the city trade in sugar shortly after the suspension of the list. Tea, sugar and general sundries have been selling more satisfactorily. In sugar jobbers are afraid of overstocking the retailers and so discounting the effects of any agreement that may be adopted for uniform prices. Canned goods are moderately active. This week's record looks better beside that of previous weeks, but is in reality no better than is commonly experienced at this season That there is no superabundance of money is manifest from the fact that sugar is not being more largely bought ahead of immediate requirements. The state of payments as well is not above the average. Bad roads have a share among the influences that tend to retard trade.

CANNED GOODS.

The demand usually begins to widen at about the middle of March. It has not flagged very much all winter, though at no time has the trade been exciting. The present week's business was a little better than usual. Some snug orders have come to hand, all in a jobbing way. In one instance 375 cases of peas were turned over at $1.10. The price holds for assorted vegetables at last week's quotations, viz., from $1.05 to $1.10. Peas are quite scarce. Inquiry for peas, corn and tomatoes continues strong but does not result in concessions. A very little would cause a big turnover, but holders are confident that the goods will be wanted and will appreciate in value rather than otherwise. Salmon is dull from $1.40, and in some cases $1.35 and upwards.

COFFEE.

Rios of good quality are still scarce, and outside markets are far from well stocked with the better grades. There is a sufficient supply of low grade and medium Rios on spot to meet the wants of current business. The price runs from 18c. upwards. Old Government Java coffees are very high and firm. Holders of choice grades on this market want 32 to 33c. Mocha is unaltered at 27 to 33c. A quiet trade is all that is to be reported.

The New York Daily Commercial Bulletin says : A comparatively moderate supply shown in first hands continues as a very good support for the spot position of Brazil coffee, and the majority of holders make a display of steadiness accordingly, with more or less difficulty still experienced in finding attractive parcels of standard goods in first hands. Some fair deliveries have been made from recent steamers, however, and the demand appears to be inclined to assume a generally cautious attitude and figure investments for the present down closely to wants of the moment, so far as both jobbing parcels and invoices are concerned. On parcels to arrive, however, there is more or less negotiation and a fuller business has been done to-day, the trading mostly in distant deliveries, where a fractional shading in cost has apparently caught waiting bids with some freedom.

DRIED FRUIT.

There is little doing in dried fruit. Buyers are disposed to believe in the weakness of the market as a more or less lasting condition, and make no haste to secure large purchases of stock. Valencia raisins are quoted from 5c. up. Currants are 5½c. and upwards. Prunes are steady and somewhat dull at unchanged prices.

The London Produce Markets' Review says :—The French demand for currants has had the effect of maintaining the price at a much higher level than would otherwise have been the case ; indeed, it may be roughly said that the demand has, owing to the comparatively new outlet mentioned above, kept with the production. In this connection it may be noted that for the first time the consumer is now realizing the benefits of the reduction of the duty in currants, which, owing in a great measure to the French demand, has chiefly gone into the pockets of the growers. There is little doubt but that a permanently lower level has now been established, and unless currants are to be an exception to the rule, the consumption in England will show considerable improvement. In the matter of raisins, it would appear to be tolerably clear that, unless the Spanish Government can bring about a reduction in duty equal to that which was granted on currants, the farmers will be compelled to submit to very low prices. Very nearly half the crop has lately been sent to the United States and Canada, and, owing to the enormous increase in the growth of Californian raisins, it is probable that the requirements of the former country will, with the heavy protection afforded to the home grown fruit, decline very considerably. Under these circumstances, a larger weight of fruit will be thrown upon the English market, and will have to be put before the consumer at exceptionally low prices.

NUTS.

Almonds, filberts and walnuts continue to be wanted in a small way. A little business is kept up all the time. The prices are stationary at points marked in Prices Current.

RICE AND SPICES.

Influences are not yet at work in this market to affect prices, the relation between the supply and demand changing little inside of a winter. Prices are steady at 4⅞ to 8c. for ordinary, but Japan is quite firm at 5½c. The price of the latter has advanced outside owing to unexpected shortage in the crop. That of itself is expected to make the price ¼c. higher.

Spices have not fluctuated in any respect since last report. A moderate business is being done.

SUGAR.

Buyers have been less eager for business than they might be expected to be in the circumstances, as they cannot look for anything better than they have had the chance of getting since since the list was dropped. They have bought two freely, however, for the satisfaction of the jobbers, who would willingly defer business until there was some certainty as to whether the combine should be reconstructed. It is probable that a list will be set up by either the refiners or the jobbers, and it would be likely to find sincere support, at least for a time, as everybody is heartily sick of the demoralization that has settled upon the sugar trade since all attempts to maintain uniformity of prices were abandoned. A meeting of the Guild was held in Montreal, and a meeting of the refiners preceded it. The outcome of these meetings has not yet been disclosed. Sugar has advanced since our last issue, the refiners' prices having gone up a quarter of a cent. Jobbers are quoting as low as 3⅝c. on yellow and 4⅝c. on granulated. Less is heard of business at 3½ and 4½c.

a large fleet of vessels from arriving in port, and hence the receipts of sugar in the four ports were only 4,494 tons, against requirements of 30,000 tons for melting. All the sugars that importers would sell was taken, leaving a stock of only 3,016 tons in first hands. Some Philadelphia refiners were obliged to stop melting, while others borrowed sugar from each other. Receipts next week should be very heavy, but the circumstance shows to how close a margin of stock refiners have allowed themselves to come. The total stock in the four ports is less than one week's requirements.

Business has continued, for afloats and shipments from Cuba, on the basis of 3⅜c. cost and freight, and at 3 13-32c. landed terms, but for shipments during the last half of this month the market is firmer. There is no weak feature to the raw sugar market on this side, in any direction, and it is somewhat surprising to note a tendency to weakness in Europe, or rather in Germany, which appears to be the only beet sugar country pressing to sell. The only plausible explanation of this weakness is found in the political condition, and the anxiety of financiers who may be anxious to turn merchandise into money. Crop prospects from several cane countries are not as flattering by this week's mail as heretofore, and the United States is still dependent on Cuba for its supplies, the European market still being above our parity.

Refined—The long-expected change in prices has at last come to stay. An advance of ⅛ to 3-16 in granulated and other grades was made on the 2nd by the American Sugar Refining Company and followed by all the other refiners, excepting the Spreckels, which continued selling at 4c. out of an accumulated surplus for one day, then advanced ⅛c., and at the close is 1-16c. below other refiners. The demand is now sufficient to take off nearly or quite all the meltings, and competition in consequence is losing its power to continue the low prices. The present advance is likely to be followed by another, and we repeat our advice to carry a full line of stock.

SYRUPS AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are cheap and dull. The lowest price quoted is 1⅞c. per lb. A quiet trade in medium grades is done.

Molasses receives but little attention. New Orleans molasses quotes at from 30c. to 50c., and West Indian at from 35c. upwards.

TEAS.

A free movement in tea is reported by all the houses. The outlet is in grades that need it most—that is, the cheap and medium teas. Japans are most active at the moment. Indian teas are still in good and increasing demand and orders from the country are coming in; they have hitherto been chiefly used for blending, but the proportion of China is getting less and less, and the day is not far distant when they will be drank straight and unmixed.

The market in London has been liberally supplied with Indian tea, says the Produce Markets Review, but the demand is inactive except for the better kinds. Common sorts have been offered in an increasing proportion, the bulk being of exceptionally poor quality, for which there is but a moderate enquiry. The result of this is a drooping tendency in the prices for all common tea, which can only be checked by an increasing demand, although there are no indications of this at the present moment. The better kinds, however, attract attention, and are readily bought at firm rates; and, judging from the later arrivals, the stock of these grades is not likely to prove in excess of requirements. It is therefore probable that there will be a strong market for these descriptions for some time to come, and the only check to an upward movement will be the large supplies of Ceylon tea, which will have a steadying effect, should they prove to be of good quality. Although the sales of Ceylon teas, conformably with advices from the island, have been considerably smaller than last year up to the same date, the demand still continues inactive, and the slight recovery noticeable about the end of January in common teas has been lost. Finer teas, however, maintain their position well, although the demand is not very active even for these descriptions; but, as the quantity advertised for next week is small, present rates bid fair to be maintained. The quality has been fairly good, showing some improvement. Java teas have been much neglected.

MARKET NOTES.

The starch manufacturers have made no further alteration in their prices or discounts.

Messrs. Sloan & Crowther have received a car of new Japan rice. It is of very fine quality.

Messrs. Caverhill, Rose, Hughes & Co., Montreal, are prepared to fill orders for Bowlby's preserved apples at special prices. These are staple goods.

There are jobbers still quoting tea and sugar together, though some houses look upon this way of doing business as unworthy of countenance, one prominent wholesaler declaring he would quit the business before he would do it.

PETROLEUM.

There is a little unsteadiness in the price of refined. The price ranges from 14 to 15c. The latter price is for small lots delivered to city retailers. On board here for shipment to outside points the price is 14c for Canadian refined. Some cutting is reported in the west.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The value of butter does not depreciate. Prices are firm at the quotations named last week. There is not, however, quite so great a shortage in the supply. The receipts suffice for the city trade, but do not enable wholesalers or commission men to ship.

MARKETS—Continued

Shipping continues from other western points to Montreal, though not on so considerable a scale as before. The stringency is clearly less than it was. Good dairy tubs are wanted and bring as high as 20c. for choice. Large rolls show nearly all the increase that there is in the supply as compared with last week. The quality of these does not rank higher than before. Prices range from 16 to 18c. Medium tub is about 14 to 16c. Common grades continue to be picked up readily outside, and find their way in but small quantity to this market.

Cheese is still firm. Small lots of choice fall are 12½c., medium-sized lots are 12c., and cars are 11½c. Early summer grades can be got as low as 10c.

COUNTRY PRODUCE.

APPLES—A rather active market is furnished by the local trade at $1.50 to $2.50 per barrel. Choice fruit will bring the upper figure.

BEANS—The demand is very dull. Farmers' offers continue to depress prices and check business in cars. Out of store prices are $1.25 to $1.35, but round lots are $1 to $1.15, according to quality.

CRANBERRIES—Are weak, plentiful and in low demand at $5.50 to $6. There are grades that can be purchased at $5.

DRIED APPLES—The market is still inactive. Out of store lots are 4¾ to 5c., the latter for bright goods. In round lots 4c. is the inside price.

EVAPORATED APPLES—A slow demand and a low supply on spot are the main features. The prices are 8 to 8½c.

EGGS—Are plentiful and weak. Fresh quote 14½ to 15c. Limed are out of demand at the moment at 13 to 13½c.

HIDES—The supply is somewhat lower. The stock is not now in its best condition. Prices, however, are unchanged at a basis of 4½c. for No. 1 green cows'. Cured are dull at 5c.

HONEY—Shows no signs of improvement. Extracted is 8 to 10c,, sections are 14 to 16c.

HOPS—Choice '91 hops are quoted from 22 to 24c., with lower grades of new at 20c. Yearlings are held at 18c. Business is dull.

ONION'S—Are firmly held at $2.50 to $3 per barrel. The stock bought at prices enabling sellers to quote the former figure is small. Higher prices have now to be paid.

POTATOES—It is hard to find buyers. Holders outside offer cars at 32c. per bag, but purchases are made only to keep stocks up. Out of store prices are 45 to 50c. per bag.

SEEDS—Some selling of timothy is reported. The price is $1.25 to $1.75 per bushel. Jobbers ask $6.50 to $8.50 for alsike and $6.25 to $6.50 for red clover.

SKINS—Good sheepskins are worth $1.25. Exceptionally heavy ones bring 5c more. Light ones are graded lower in price.

TALLOW—Is unchanged. Rough is 2c.; refined is 5½ to 6c.

WOOL—Continues dull at 18c.

DRESSED HOGS AND PROVISIONS.

Receipts of hogs are on the decline, few being received by rail, and a diminishing number by street delivery. The highest price going is $6. Western points also report a falling-off in receipts as well.

BACON—Is quite firm at 7¾ to 8c. for long clear. Smoked bellies are 10c. for heavy, 10½c. for medium and 11c. for boneless, backs are 10c., rolls are 8¾c.

HAMS—Are unchanged and in fair demand at 10½ to 11c.

LARD—The price has eased for tubs, which are now 9¾c. Pails are 10c.

BARREL PORK—United States mess is $13 to $14, and Canadian is $15. Canadian short cut is $16 to $16.50.

FRESH MEATS—There is a lot of rather poor stock offering. Prices are easier. Beef is 4½ to 5c. in forequarters and 7 to 8c. in hindquarters. Lamb is wanted at 8½ to 9½c., mutton 6 to 7c., veal 8½ to 9½c.

GREEN FRUIT.

The loss to receivers through re-packing necessitated by wastiness in Florida oranges, is beginning to tell upon prices, which now quote from $3.50 to $4. Valencias are unchanged at $3.75 to $4. Lemons are firmer and scarcer at $3.50 to $4.50. Bananas are steady and scarce at $2.50. Pineapples are $3 per doz. A fair business in fruits is reported

FISH AND OYSTERS.

Fresh fish are almost a drug on the market. Dealers seem to be unable to explain why the movement is so slow, but the fact remains. The Pope's Letter had undoubtedly some effect on the consumption, but the peculiar feature of the market is that while fresh fish are not selling well, salt fish are moving freely. Prices remain much as last week, with a less hopeful market. Oysters are slow and prices easy.

SALT.

The past week has been a quiet one for the salt trade, only two cars, one of barrels and one of fine sacks, have been moved. The trade in small quantities, also, has been quiet, and demand remains easy.

DRY GOODS.

Trade during the past week has been fairly lively, a large number of merchants having visited the city. The payments on 4th inst., seem to have satisfied the wholesale merchants, and were better probably than the reasonable men expected. Prices of cottons are firm and this class of goods, together with prints and summer dress goods are moving very freely.

MONTREAL MARKETS.

MONTREAL, March 10, 1892.

GROCERIES.

Business since our last has shown no marked improvement, and travellers reports from the country are fair. Teas and dried fruits have a little better movement this week, but other lines are quiet. Sugar is still being sold at a very low price by some of the houses, while other houses are still keeping to the old figure. Messrs. Wills, Davidson, and Stuart, representing the Toronto and Western houses, were in town to to meet the refiners for the purpose of coming to some agreement regarding the sugar question, but the trade here will not say what was done in the matter. Payments on the whole are fair, and what few extensions that are given are only for a short time.

SUGAR.

The sugar market remains the same as last week, some of the houses here are selling a large quantity at a heavy cutting price, but values at the refineries remain unchanged. The war between the large English houses and the French houses is unabated, and is likely to continue for some time, unless some agreement is arrived at. The refiners were in session last Saturday considering the new

FLOUR AND FEED.

Flour is held back at the mills. Any movement in the way of business is fitful and very limited. Inquiry from the east is abundant, but it is all of a very bearish character. This is one of the worst seasons the millers have had for years. The deadlock with Newfoundland of itself is a considerable check to business. The trade with that colony sufficed formerly to take off a quantity equal to the yearly output of three of our largest mills. But the large crop and very good quality of the wheat grown in the province of Quebec is a greater hindrance. To be sure it is not milled as it is here, but it is made into flour and the people use the flour. Another general obstacle to trade is the unprecedentedly large crop of potatoes grown last year all over the world and the low prices for them now ruling. There is a feeling that wheat will be cheaper. Feed is very dull.

FLOUR.—City millers' and dealers' prices are : Manitoba patents, $5.20 ; strong bakers', $4.85 ; Ontario patents, $4.40 ; straight roller, $4.75 ; extra, $4.10 to $4.15 : low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

Car prices are : Toronto freights—Manitoba patents, $5.15 to $5.20 ; Manitoba strong bakers' $4.75 to $4.95 ; Ontario patents, $4.50 to $4.90 ; straight roller, $4.10 to $4.20; extra, $3.95 to $4.00; low grades, per bag, $1.25 to $1.75.

MEAL Oatmeal is $3 90 to $4.00. Cornmeal is $4.

BUCKWHEAT FLOUR—Is $4.50 per barrel.

FEED—Bran is $14 to $15, shorts $15 to $16, mixed feed $23 to $25, cracked corn $1.15, feeding corn 50 to 52, oats 33 to 34c.

HAY—is fairly active at $11.50 to $12 for No.1 timothy and $10 to $10.50 for mixed.

STRAW—is steady at $6 to $6.50.

MONTREAL.

There is only a small hand to mouth movement in flour, dealers only buying enough for actual necessities. The stocks in store show an increase of 22,789 barrels compared with a week ago, and a decrease of 7,247 barrels compared with a year ago. We quote as follows :—Winter patents, $5 to $5.25 ; spring patents, $5.40 to $5.50; straight rollers, $4.70 to $4.80; extra, $4 40 to $4.50; superfine, $4 to $4.10 ; city strong bakers', $5; strong bakers', $4.80 to $4.90.

There is no improvement in the demand for oatmeal, prices being unchanged at $2. The stocks in store show a decrease of 126 barrels compared with a week ago, and an increase of 2,886 barrels compared with a year ago. We quote prices unchanged. Standard, per bag, $2.10 to $2 20 ; granulated, $2.10 to $2.20 ; rolled, $2.10 to $2.20.

The feed market is quiet. Bran and shorts are moving in a jobbing way at quotations. We quote bran at $16 to $17 ; shorts, $17 to $18 ; moullie $24.

ST. JOHN, N. B.

Flour—is lifeless and the tone is rather easier, some even favor the opinion of lower prices again, though there is no change in values as yet from last week's quotations.

Corn Meal—The price remains steady with a fair demand, $2.85 to $2.95.

Oatmeal—The market is well supplied with roller. Though standard has been in good demand, the stocks of the latter being light, $4.45 to $4.60 seeming the ruling prices.

Hay—is more plentiful than last week, and prices rule somewhat easier.

Oats—are selling 41c. to 44c.

proposition of the Wholesale Grocers Guild, but have not come to any decision as yet. It is also understood that Toronto parties were here to meet the wholesalers and refiners, but could not say what agreement they came to. One of the members of a leading French house speaking of the trouble said there was no knowing how matters would end. They were selling granulated at under cost, and would continue to do so until some agreement was arrived at. The refiners are quoting granulated at 4½c. and yellows at 3¼ to 4¼c. They report business fair but not as large as it would be if matters were in a more settled state. The firm who started the cutting are still at it and say they will continue to do so as long as their stock lasts, they claim to have 30,000 barrels of sugar in stock or under contract. The English houses are still selling at the old figure viz. 4½c.

SYRUP AND MOLASSES.

Syrups are still in slow demand, Canadian being still quoted at 1¾ to 2¾c. per lb. The trade in molasses is confined to a small jobbing movement at 34 to 35c. for Barbadoes. American molasses is also moving slowly at 26 to 28c. Stocks here are light. Latest advices from Barbadoes quote 15c., which is equal to 32c. here. The reports as to extent of crop differ very materially, however, one being that owing to the dry weather reaping will have to be hurried along and the harvest curtailed in consequence. Another report says that the yield will be large, 45,000 puncheons being the estimate. We quote Barbadoes 35c.; American 28c.; syrups are quoted at 25 to 28c. for medium bright, 30 to 45c. for choice; amber 40 to 45c.

TEAS.

The tea market has shown a marked improvement since our last, especially in high grade Japans, worth from 15 to 25c., were in good demand, the stocks being small. Indian, Ceylon and low grade blacks were also moved more easy, especially in the latter. The stock here of low grade Japans is too large and buyers are holding off; but the sale of some 900 packages from a large block which has been on the market for some time will have a beneficial effect. The sale was made in the west.

COFFEES.

The coffee market is still dull and unchanged, and beyond a small jobbing trade ex-store there is nothing new to note. Prices remain unchanged and we quote 18 to 20c. in Rios and Jamaicas.

RICE.

In rice there is nothing doing, and in the absence of business of importance prices are purely nominal.

DRIED FRUIT.

In dried fruit business has been fairly active with a good movement in a small way. Values however are comparatively low on both currants and raisans, and some figure from this upon an advance in the near future. Prime Valencias move between 4¾ and 5c., layers 6 to 6½c. Patras currants are unchanged at 5 to 5½c. and Vostizzas in cases 7½ to 8c. Prunes rule quiet, old Bosnias being dull at 4c., new stock on the basis of 5½ to 6c. attracting more attention. We quote prime Valencias at 5c.; currants at 5 to 5¼c. for Patras, and 7½ to 8c. for Vostizzas in cases; Bosnia prunes, 5½ to 6c.; figs 10.; and dates 5c. per lb.

NUTS.

The only change in nuts is in Grenoble walnuts, which are 1c. lower this week at 11 to 12c. We quote as follows :—Almonds Tarragona 14 to 15c.; Almonds, Ivica 14 to 15c.; Almonds, common 10 to 11c.; Almonds, hardshell 07 to 08c.; Walnuts, Grenoble, new 12 to 12c.; Walnuts, French 10 to 10½c.; Cocoanuts per 100 $4.50 to $5; Filberts 9 to 10c.; Pecans 16 to 17c.; Peanuts 07 to 10c.

CANNED GOODS.

The demand for canned goods is small and is likely to continue so for a few weeks longer. Grocers are only placing sorting orders, and very small ones at that. There is another block of 1,000 cases tomatoes, which are being offered around at $1, but no buyers can be found. Jobbing prices are unchanged as follows :—Lobsters, per case, $7.75 to $8; mackerel, per case, $4.25 to $4.50; sardines, per case, $8.50 to $9.50; salmon, per box, $1.35 to $1.40; clams, 1 lb. tins, per doz., $2; oysters, 1 lb. tins, per doz., $1.40 to $1.45; New Brunswick sardines, per 100, $4.75 to $5; tomatoes, Quebec, $1.05 to $1 10; peaches, per doz., $2 to $2.10; Bartlett pears, 2 lb. tins, per doz., $1.75 to $2; strawberries, 2 lb. tins, per doz., $2.25 to $2.50; pineapples, 2 lb. tins, per doz., $2.30 to $2.40; plums, 2 lb. tins, per doz., $1.25 to $1.75; corn, Erie & Aylmer, per doz., $1 to $1.10; corn, Hoeggs, $1.25 to $1.30; string beans, 2 lb. tins, per doz., 90c. to $1; Lima beans, 2 lb. tins, per doz., $1.20 to $1.25; marrowfat peas, 2 lb. tins, per doz., $1.10 to $1.15; succotash, 2 lb. tins, per doz., $1.80 to $2.

GREEN FRUIT.

Green fruit is quiet and unchanged, with no new feature to note since our last. We quote Valencia oranges at $3.25 to $3.50; Floridas $2.75 to $3.25, and bitter $3.00 to $3.50. Lemons $2.50 to $3.

APPLES.

The apple trade is quiet, with no new feature to note. We quote $2.50 to $3 in a jobbing way. Evaporated are firmly held at 8 to 9c.; dried are dull and unchanged at 5 to 6c. There is a lot of damaged stock on the market which does not get good call.

HOPS.

There is so little enquiry here at present that it is impossible accurately to quote prices. For choice Canadians 24c. is probably an extreme figure. The New York market is reported quiet but showing a fairly good tone. Statistics gathered by the Hop Dealers Exchange there indicate a crop of less than 125,000 bales in that state the past season against previous estimates of 130 to 140 bales based upon earlier returns. Pressed hops have a fair movement in a jobbing way and quite a few small lots have been turned over at 16 to 17c.

FISH.

There has been some slight increase in the volume of business since our last report but the destributions still compare unfavorable with that which is usual at this season. Prices are unchanged as follows We quote : Herring, No. 1, per bbl., $5.25 to $5.30; lake trout, per half bbl., $4.25 to $4.50; sea trout, per bbl., $9.00 to $9.50; codfish, green, No. 1, per bbl. $5 to $5.25; do. No. 2, per bbl., $4.50 to $4.75; codfish, dried, per bbl., $5 to $5.05; salmon, B.C., per bbl., $13 to $13.50; do., Nfld., No. 1, per tee, $22.50 to $23; do. do., No. 2, per tee, $21 to $21.50; do. do., No. 3, per tee, $20 to $20.50.

PROVISIONS.

Trade progresses quietly, and the market shows no material change. There is perhaps a slight falling off in the demand, but this is thought to be due solely to the all absorbing topic of election. The feeling is weak and quotations are unchanged only because there is no business doing. We quote : Canadian short cut, per brl. $16.50 to $17.00; mess pork, western, per brl. $16.00 to $16.50; short cut, western, per brl. $17 to $17.25; hams, city cured, per lb. 10½c. to 11c; lard, Canadian, in pails, 8⅞c. to 9c ; bacon per lb. 9c. to 10c ; lard, com. refined, per lb. 7¼ to 8c.

BUTTER AND CHEESE.

The cheese market is decidedly an uninteresting one as far as local business is concerned, there is nothing outside a moderate trade of consigned stock to the city grocers. In England the markets continue steady, but a peculiar feature is the unproportionately wide difference between London and Liverpool prices. Advices so far received do not explain the cause of this diversity. Butter does not exhibit any great change. The stock of choice Township dairy is diminishing very rapidly, and for a few choice lots 21c. is readily obtained. Buyers are still holding aloof from creamery and for this reason consigners are, with the consent of the owners in some cases offering their goods at lower rates, but in the general complexion of the market there is not much change. We quote :—Finest creamery, 22 to 23c. ; Finest Townships, 18 to 21c. ; Morrisburg and Brockville, 18 to 19c. ; Finest Western, 16½ to 17½c.

EGGS.

The market is easier, fresh eggs being now offered as low as 18c. Limed stock is worth about 14c., while extra fresh new laid stock being 25c.

GRAIN.

Wheat rules quiet on spot with little to note, but in the interior the tendency of values continues upward. Receipts are freer than formerly. There were purchases today in the Northwest from 65 to 70c. for good grades. A noticeable feature this year is the demand for best grades for seed wheat.

Oats, barley, etc., are dull and steady in a jobbing way.

We quote values generally as follows :— No. 2 hard Manitoba $1.03 to $1.04; No. 3, do., 97c; No. 2 Northern, $1.04; peas, 73 to 74c. per 66 pounds; oats, 29 to 30c. per 32 pounds ; corn, 60 to 62c. duty paid; feed barley, 42 to 45c.; good malting do., 60 to 63c.

ST. JOHN, N. B., MARKETS.

ST. JOHN, N. B., March, 7, 1892.

NEW YORK FOOD EXPOSITION.

On Monday the great Food and Health Exposition, under the auspices of the Retail Grocers' Union of New York, was opened in that city. It will remain open till April 2. The proceeds will go to the construction of a building for the Retail Grocers' Union. Among the exhibitors the New York Commercial Bulletin notes the following :—

Near the vestibule at the main door is the display of the New York Biscuit Co.

The main floor, with the advantage of a harmony of color and under an increased number of electric lights, presents a notable picture. Messrs. Walter Baker & Co., of Dorchester, Mass , have secured the stage, where there is abundant room for these decorations, and cocoa or chocalate will be served in dainty cups to visitors.

N. K. Fairbank & Co., having increased their spaces beyond their original allotment, show their Cottoline products, and expert cooks will be ready to demonstrate the use and benefits of the products which have won favor by tests and trials that speak for themselves. Special attention to beauty in decoration has been given to their exhibit.

Enoch Morgan's Sons, with two spaces, have spent much money to demonstrate the advantage of sapolio in an effective way.

The Huckins soups are shown from two spaces.

E. C. Hazard & Co., display catsups and other preparations.

The Snyder Preserve Company have fitted up handsomely two spaces for their soups and catsups and the distribution of both.

The Cleveland Baking Powder Company have two spaces in the centre circle

LEGAL RULINGS IN BUSINESS CASES.

In the Queen's Bench and Common Pleas Divisional Court in Osgoode Hall before Justice Galt was tried the case of Mack v. Dobie.—G. W. Marsh (London), for the plaintiff, moved for an interim injunction restraining the defendant from interfering with assets alleged to be assets of a partnership between the plaintiff and defendant, now dissolved, and for the appointment of a receiver pendente lite. M. G. Cameron, for the defendant, contended that there was no partnership between the plaintiff and defendant. Motion dismissed. Costs in the cause.

The last apparently has not been heard of the now celebrated case of Green v. Minnes. In the Court of Appeal before Chief Justice Hagarty and Justices Osler, Burton and Meredith, H. S. Osler, for the defendants, moved ex parte for leave to appeal from tha judgment of the Queen's Bench Divisional Court in favor of the plaintiff in an action for libel, which was tried before Rose, J., without a jury (by consent) at Kingston. The libel complained of consisted in an advertisement published by the defendants, Minnes & Burns, through a collecting agency advertising an account against the female plaintiff for sale. Rose, J., found a verdict for the defendants, but this was set aside by the Divisional Court and a verdict entered for $50. The court directed that notice of the motion should be served on the plaintiffs.

An Easy Way to Make 150 Dollars.

SOLID CASH

1st. 150 Dollars to the first wholesale traveller who sells 500 boxes.
2nd. 100 " " second " " " "
3rd. 50 " " third " " " "
4th. 10 " to every traveller who sells 100 boxes during March and April.

NOTE.—These boxes must be sold in the regular way to your retail customers.

This money should be easily earned for the following reasons :

1st—The Yeast is put up in 50 cent boxes, containing 2 dozen of the largest 5 cent packages on the market. You have therefore only to sell 250 dollars worth to get the prize.

2nd—The retailer makes 70 cents on his purchase of 50 cents, or 140 per cent. profit, being 60 per cent. more than he makes by selling any other yeast.

3rd—Each package contains 6 large cakes, at least 20 per cent. more yeast than the package of other makers, a great saving to the consumer.

4th—"Barm" Yeast is of exceptional merit, only requiring a trial to be appreciated, and we guarantee all goods to be thoroughly tested before leaving the factory.

The money has been deposited with the CANADIAN GROCER. We refer you to the proprietors of that paper, who will pay the amounts to the winners when satisfactory evidence of sales is furnished to them.

CERTIFICATES OF STRENGTH AND PURITY.

OFFICE OF THE PUBLIC ANALYST,

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Co., Montreal:

GENTLEMEN,—I have personally taken samples from a large stock of your Granulated Sugar, "REDPATH" brand, and carefully tested them by the Polariscope, and I find these samples to be as near to absolute purity as can be obtained by any process of Sugar-Refining.

The test by the Polariscope showed in yesterday's yield 99·90 per cent. of Pure Cane Sugar, which may be considered commercially as ABSOLUTELY PURE SUGAR.

JOHN BAKER EDWARDS, P.L.D., D.C.L., F.C.S.,

Public Analyst for the District of Montreal, and Professor of Chemistry.

CHEMICAL LABORATORY, MEDICAL FACULTY, McGILL UNIVERSITY.

MONTREAL, September 9th, 1887.

To the Canada Sugar Refining Company:

GENTLEMEN,—I have taken and tested a sample of your "EXTRA GRANULATED" Sugar, and find that it yielded 99·88 per cent. of Pure Sugar It is practically as pure and good a Sugar as can be manufactured.

Yours truly,

G. P. GIRDWOOD.

It is well-known

That successful Doctors read all the latest medical books and papers and go abroad occasionally to study. Successful lawyers read legal publications to learn the latest legal decisions and points constantly cropping up. Teachers, clergymen, druggists, architects, all read the publication issued in the interests of their profession. They must do so to keep up with the times.

The same applies to grocers and general merchants. They must not only read the best papers published in their interests but must also watch the advertisements closely. There they learn the rise and fall in prices; latest trade news and methods of buying, handling and selling goods, so that they may make the greatest profit. A doctor reads much that he already knows, so does a lawyer. So does a number of any of the other professions. So will a merchant. It is often the issue of the paper he misses that is worth dollars to him. His best and safest policy, therefore, is to subscribe for his trade paper.

The only exclusively grocery and general store paper is THE CANADIAN GROCER issued weekly, subscription price $2.00 per year.

SPECIAL TO OUR READERS.

As the design of THE CANADIAN GROCER is to benefit mutually all interested in the business, we would request all parties ordering goods or making purchases of any description from houses advertising with us to mention in their letter that such advertisement was noticed in THE CANADIAN GROCER.

The extinction of the free retailer would be a disaster, not merely to the people who make their living by trade, but to the whole community. As has been shown in former articles, it would remove a powerful pressure from prices and would banish voluntary enterprise from trade. Where capital and business individuality are hedged about by restrictions, neither will be easily induced to enter. How much of the material progress of the towns and cities of this or any country has been due to the fact that every trader was the master of his own business? In the first place, would the fine buildings in which so many of our retailers carry on business, have existed if customers had always been secured by such contracts as the Patrons ask merchants to sign? They certainly would not. Those fine buildings were put up, stocked, appointed and managed, to bid for the custom that was free in the country round. If the traders who keep store in them had always got customers by the Patrons' way, there would be no need for attractive shops and all the conveniences and refinements of modern trade. Competition would have been weeded, and a prosaic, plodding, eighteenth century style of doing business amid a disarray of boxes, barrels, etc., would be in vogue to-day. The present sprightly conditions of business are the evolution of competition that gave the consumer a choice of supply.

But our towns and cities would lack more than their fine stores, elaborate mercantile service and low prices. The greatest promoters of the growth of towns and cities have always been the merchant class. If a factory was proposed to be started, a railroad projected, any public works contemplated, the most urgent supporters of these were the merchants. A factory would employ hands, diffuse money, import wage-earners, increase the population, and in this way benefit the merchants who wanted more people to sell goods to. A railroad would increase the traffic, cause the opening up of whatever resources lay about the town—as mines, lumber regions, water-power, agriculture,—develop industry, and probably make a market for a big surrounding district. It would thus help the merchants. But these same advantages would bring other traders, mechanics, etc., to minister to the increased wants of a larger population, and thus multiply the competition in favor of buyers. Schools, churches, all the enlightening influences have been brought rapidly into existence in all parts of the country, and one of the strongest levers for the obtaining of them has been the activity, mercantile interests. Every improvement to any town has been to the advantage of the country tributary to that town. Reduce the number of the merchants, organize all the customers, tie each surviving merchant to a specified list of customers, and he will have no object in doing anything to increase the population or the wealth of his town. His spirited part in the work of keeping up the condition of roads, abolishing tolls and market fees, etc., would be a thing of the past. The very reduction in the number of the merchants would tell immensely on the public spirit of a town or city.

Thus would the decline of the free merchant affect disastrously the whole community. It would remove a powerful curb from prices and a powerful incentive from municipal prosperity Towns would wane and local markets would crumble away. The sleepy few left in trade by the will of the Patrons would be incapable of handing on the light that the swift-moving men of our times would leave burning. And the workers of this ruin would reap their full share of the general mischief. They would pay more for their goods, because wholesalers could force prices upwards against the feeble resistance of the subdued remnant who would be in trade on the Patrons' conditions, and the higher the wholesalers' prices would be the wider would be the retailers' margin. There would be fewer to bid for the farmers' produce, so that butter and eggs would go at lower prices than if there were many and keen competitors for the farmers' trade. The Patrons are the victims of a huge mistake, the effects of which they will feel most when their idea triumphs most.

* * *

The traders, therefore, who so far have withstood the temptations, threats and debilitating rivalry that the Patrons bring to bear upon them are deserving of credit for their steady adherence to a principle that at the outset must cost them loss. Many of these steadfast men are now under a boycott, of which the object is to coerce them into unconditional surrender to their former customers, now organized into a Patron lodge. There is no doubt it takes a stiff determination to stand out against arguments that appear to be backed up by the withdrawal of the means of livelihood, and all honor is due to those who have the spine in their will to do it. The merchant of course is not always like the big manufacturer, who can let his works lie idle and starve men on strike into unwilling submission. Too commonly he is like the man who lives by his wages, and the loss of the former's custom is like the loss of the latter's situation. It seems, however, that the acceptance of the Patrons' conditions is about as speedy a way of going to the dogs as a trader can adopt. The record of failures so far goes to show this.

NEW YORK FOOD AND HEALTH EXPOSITION.

The Food and Health Exposition which opened in New York at the Lenox Lyceum under the auspices of the New York Retail Grocers' Union, on Monday the 7th inst., is now in full tide. The Exposition will be open until the 2nd of April. Much might be said of the decorations of the various exhibits. Mr. L. J. Callanan, the manager, has done his duty well, and made himself exceedingly popular with everybody.

Our representative, who has been constantly in attendance, through the courtesy of The New York Retail Grocers' Union, whose special invitation he availed himself of, acknowledges his appreciation of the many favors shown to THE CANADIAN GROCER by the manager and his assistant, Mr. F. W. Eddy ; also by Mr. Chas. Chamberland, the press agent. While the visitors move around taking in the sights, Cappa's Band furnishes delightful music. On entering the building the first sight that meets the eye is the immense sign of Messrs. Walter Baker & Co., Dorchester, Mass., above their exhibit on the stage. Their Mr. J. H. Williams and his four lady assistants, in costume of the trade mark, give hundreds of cups of cocoa away each day.

The T. A. Snider Preserve Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, show three pillars of their catsup and canned soups, and Miss Snider sees that visitors get a little sample bottle of the same and a novelty advertising card.

One of the features of the exhibit in the front parlor, is this firm's specialties, most prominent of which is "Burnham's Clam Bouillon, under the careful management of Mr. Geo. W. Butler, assisted by a corps of salesladies, whose abilities are earnestly exerted in furthering the success of the display. "Clam Bouillon" has already a ready sale on the Canadian market, and will be served free over the counters of the principal grocers in Ontario during the coming summer.

Cleveland Baking Powder Co. is there with its usual showy appearance. They are manufacturing all kinds of good things and distributing the same along with their cook books.

Hecker's self-raising buckwheat flour people are turning out griddle cakes in front of a novel attraction. They have samples of their goods under glass marked out Hecker's and a gas sign on which the name appears when lighted. These goods have sale in Canada.

Quaker Oats have a statue of an old Quaker to represent their trade-mark. They are busy making griddle cakes for the mass.

Maillard's Chocolate and Cocoa Co. keep busy two young ladies serving cups of their preparation just to the right of the main entrance.

Domestic M'fg Co., Brooklyn, N.Y., with their Domestic Scouring Soap, are not behind the others here before mentioned. If every circular is read by the receiver that they give away it cannot fail to make a good impression.

The C. W. Kopf Co. Mr. Ashley has his lady assistants in order, and Kopf's pea soup is the standard.

Mullen & Blackledge, who manufacture Columbia Catsup at Indianapolis, Ind., are represented and giving out many samples.

Jerome Extract M'fg Co., with their fairy breath extract, have two ladies in costume to represent fairies. Cake flavored with these extracts, they claim, will keep six months. Mr. Palmer is in charge.

Wolff & Randolph, Philadelphia, Pa., are pushing their Acme Blacking and Pikron, which has a good sale on the Canadian market.

The New York Biscuit Co., have a novel feature shown by displaying their goods in the Annex. They may well be proud of the tasty array, and of the quality they are manufacturing.

Delafield McGovern & Co., have a very original exhibit in the Annex. They are displaying their CloverLeaf California wines, and have fitted their place as a summer house with grape vines and clusters of grapes hanging from the roof. This is the company which put the Clover Leaf brand of canned goods on the Canadian market.

L. Schepp are in it with their Cocoanut, and are disposing of neat little sample lines of their goods.

Cushing Process Co. Mr. Bullock has charge of these sanitary stimulants and has with Mr. Croft, made an elaborate display, an interesting study for the sight seer.

"Ayer's Coffee Substitute," is something new, but on the safe road to fame in the hands of Mr. Prevost.

NOTES.

Mr. Wolff, of Wolff & Randolph, Philadelphia, Pa., has spent a few days around the building.

The manager extends a hearty invitation to the Canadian grocers to visit the Exposition before it closes on April 2nd.

The Madison Avenue Hotel opposite the Exposition enjoys the patronage of the visitors from outside cities, who arrive on special excursions each day.

A GROCER'S TRIALS.

What a long suffering people we are ! How very willing we are to be gulled almost every time that a half-clever dodge comes along ! We read of the hay-fork swindle and say "served him right." Then the seed-wheat fiend turns up and ropes in his victim, and we wonder how long it will be before the eyes of people are open anyway. We would like to see them fool us on a churn or a washing machine, and we tell ourselves that if we should sign a bit of paper by way of giving a receipt for the safe reception of a piano on storage and afterwards find that it had developed into a note for $300, we should certainly deserve to pay it and to be put on bread and water for six months to boot. O yes, we tilt our chair back and feel very sure that the man who beats us must get up early in the morning. But in this we are mistaken, for it is really not at all difficult to get us to do silly, irregular and unbusiness like things. It is not much of a trick to work us up to paying from 25 to 100 per cent more for a thing than we should pay. Look at it as we will, the unsuspicious public of which we form a part, are ready for almost the next fake that comes along.

This is really not to be wondered at when we consider how thoroughly we have been educated on this point during the past fifteen years, particularly in that which we eat and drink. Our instructors have been manufacturers and wholesale men who have kept right at us through our retail merchants, and will probably continue to do so as long as we will pay the fees. Our tuition does not appear to cost much, because, like the traveller's coat in the expense report, it is not seen. But it is there all the same.

Perhaps no class of business men have undergone a severer strain than the grocers during the past several years. Up to a certain point they were doing business properly, and many of them bid fair to see what became of a Christian after death, but alas, how things have changed ! Those days are in the majority of cases but little more than a memory. Those were the days of bread leavened by soda, salaratus and Cook's Friend baking powder. But the voice of the spice grinder and the bulk baking-powder man was heard in the land. He came along with his kit on his back containing all manner of silver spoons, imitation hammered brass goods, French marble clocks, champagne sets, etc., etc. These were offered to the upright grocer, free, gratis, for nothing, actually free of cost, no charge whatever, if he would buy the new powder which was guaranteed a superior article, at the same or even a lower price. Do you wonder at the grocer accepting a French clock or other piece of goods? Not at all. Perhaps he needed a time piece, and never thought that his customers were paying for it. You know there are cases where ignorance is bliss, but the time came when the grocer was forced to share with his customers or he would have the privilege of putting up his baking powder alongside of the clock in the dining-room.

He, of course wanted to do the right thing with the people out of whom he made his bread and butter, and so got in glassware by the barrel in order that they all might have some, and is it not now an established fact that they all got filled, and that which remained over and above all demands was removed to the back shop where in some cases it remains unto this day a substantial evidence that things are not always what they seem ?

The grocer, being a progressive man did not stop trying to please his clients simply because they did not need all his glassware culls, but tried his luck in delf-goods next, and when these were ready to join the glass refuse in the back shop, he bobbed serenely, up with a silk handkerchief, at least, it looked like silk, tasted like silk, smelled like silk, and very likely had some silk in it. At any rate he got rid of some of them, and the balance came in good for mopping his face when he perspired over the glass and delf in the back shop.

Where is the man who supplied the clocks, the glassware, the delf and the handkerchiefs? Has he repented? Not a bit of it. If the grocer will become a channel through which he can fool the public, where is the harm? If he don't do it some other fellow will, and he may as well make the money. He can give liberally to some charitable purpose and thus hide the price of the premium which he has tacked on to his list price, or perhaps conceal the P. D. in the spice, and keep down the smell of the old bones in his baking powder.

The premium man is not knocked out by any means. He knows very well that variety is the spice of life and so keeps the premium pot boiling. He next arranges a regular lottery scheme and approaches the ever accomodating grocer. He knows it is not lawful, but then they can't touch him. The grocer must look out for himself. He simply makes it ready for execution, delivers so much of the only pure baking powder, and a very cheap looking organ of the $5 bedstead architecture. Then the curtain rises and the struggle is on.

'Tis wicked, that is a little wicked. There was a time when the grocer would not have done it without first consulting his minister, but he has been so often in the camp of the Philistine manufacturer that none of these things move him now, and he calmly drops the fifty cents of the party taking a draw, into his till just as serenely as if he gave him ten or fifteen pounds of sugar for it. Sometimes the last draw has been made and the organ that never played a tune (nicely) stands at the rear of the shop looking more ill-begotten as days and flies increase, and finally is looked upon as nothing more than an incentive to profanity. It is just possible that cuss words have been used in its very presence. It is but fair to add that the bellows of the machine are all right, being constructed after much the same principle as the breezy man who overcame the grocer with its great utility. Of course the baking powder man does not make much money on the kist o' whistles over and above the profit on the goods, perhaps not more than 100 per cent.

When the music box played out for lack of a steady stream of fools with 50 cents each, other desirable temptations trooped along to the shop of the now shackeled retailer. Sideboards, sewing machines, goat-skin rugs, with the perfume thrown in, scales, gents' easy chairs, ladies' rockers, office desks, coal stoves, etc. What for ? Why to bribe him to buy goods of the vendor, and to enable him to bribe the consumer. Times have changed. Goods were once sold on their merits, now they are often pushed on the market by the premium or bonus in the rear.

Before concluding my observations, I must not forget to mention the thoughtfulness of the enterprising manufacturer who capped the climax by giving the grocer 200 lbs. of spice. Spice did I say? Well I beg the manufacturer's pardon. I presume it is hardly fair to accuse the compound of containing any perceptible quantity of that article, although I believe it was shipped as such in some cases. However the grocer man got 200 lbs. of something and a gold watch for $40. Surely the premium nuisance has at last redeemed himself. That watch ought to cover a multitude of sins and hide a pile of sand.

The mayor of one proud city wore the watch in his vest pocket, but the 200-lb. accompaniment he carefully piled up for jobbing purposes. He is a courageous man, but he invariably weakened when he thought of offering the stuff for sale. What about the watch? Oh well he wore it right along every day. Of course he lost on the spice but he made on the watch. It was a regular goer. It ought to be. You can't buy them by the cart load for much less than about $8 a piece. His Worship intended it for a present to his son who had reached the gold watch period, but the young man was simply too ungrateful to accept it. Some fellows do think that they know more than their fathers.

That spice ! ! ! Well, I knew of one man who thought so much of his two hundred pounds that he offered it to a stranger in a neighboring town if he would pay the freight on it, 35 cents. The hard-hearted stranger would not do it. 'Tis hard, tis true, but then people have always differed even on minor points.

Need I say more in proof of the determined effort made by some baking powder and spice men to demoralize the grocer? It is a matter of regret that he has not long ago seen through this unbusiness-like procedure and prevented these nondescripts from making him a dumping ground for all the gilded rubbish they desire to unload at his door.

Who are the manufacturers to-day who stand best with the retailers the country over? Those who have persistently sold their goods on their merits. Who are the manufacturers to-day who afford the grocer the most relief when they leave his store? Those who haven't enough backbone to risk selling their goods on their stamina, but pester, annoy and humbug with the high-toned premiums I have described. These are the men who are making it difficult to do business and causing thousands of people to expect something for nothing. If these men knew their real weight on the public scales they would consider themselves altogether too light for business and would likely take in their shingles.

Look at it as you will, the system to which I have referred is no longer respected by the best trade, and it is but a matter of time when business can be no longer done in this way. JIM DRIFTWOOD.

SIDE LINES, OR GLIMPSES INTO MY NOTE BOOK.

BUTTER.

I have often wondered when reflecting on the manner in which some grocers conduct their business, how in the world they could get the consumer to deal with them for any length of time. There are any number of so-called first-class grocery stores which but for their finer external appearance are no more worthy of patronage by cleanly people than their more humble competitors on the side streets. In making these remarks I have particular reference to the manner in which their more perishable and delicate goods are handled and stored. It is quite a common thing to observe a basket of choice dairy roll butter lying beside a well-cut-into ham or side of bacon, and not infrequently near a barrel of strong-smelling fish, and any person of ordinary intelligence can readily understand that there is no article so susceptible to foreign smells as butter. Often the dealer has two or three grades of butter, some a good deal past middle age, all spread out on the tray in his ice-chest, or as I have lately noticed in a store in the west end, spread out on a board stained with ham and bacon grease. How anybody can enjoy butter so handled passes my comprehension. The greatest care and pains are required in the storing and handling of such articles as butter, lard, milk, eggs and cheese, and a really first-class grocery store will always keep these goods in a separate and well-aired, cleanly place, apart from any article likely to leave its odor on these delicate products. I know that usage governs the present order of things, but it will not be many years before this city will be well supplied with such stores, and an establishment so conducted must bring the rich reward it deserves. Already the signs are showing themselves, the pioneers are entering the woods and making a clearing for themselves, witness Spadina avenue, Yonge and Queen streets. May the good work continue.

FISH.

My attention has lately been attracted by a magnificent display of fish in the windows of a store upon Yonge street. It was not that there was a larger or more varied assortment of fish exposed, or that they were of a finer grade than one notices in fish stores generally, but it was the splendid arrangement of the kinds on sale, and the perfect cleanliness of the surroundings and the absence to a great extent of that penetrating odor usually noticed in similar establishments, that drew my attention and admiration to the display. The proprietor evidently understood the art of handling, keeping and offering for sale this popular article of diet. Now that we are in the Lenten season, and, despite the dispensation of the Pope, a very large amount of fish will still be consumed, if for nothing more than a change of diet, it might be well to call the attention of such grocers as are handling fish to the necessity of showing their stock up in the most appetizing and saleable manner. Often one notices by the door of a grocery store a barrel of herring, white fish or trout, which but for the fact that the labels appended to the packages designated their contents, one would imagine to be some rusty strips of iron or pieces of old sole leather. They resemble fish no more than oysters do doughnuts. The stock of fish referred to above, however, looked temptingly fresh and clean, and were so well brined and laid out that to look was to purchase, and I proved no exception. I had to buy, and I know where to go in future when I want a good fish.

The Labrador herring are the most called for, principally on account of their cheapness. It would be well for dealers to see that their stocks are continually kept well-brined, and not allow them to lie exposed and become rusty, for the air will very speedily evaporate the brine, leaving the fish brown and dirty in appearance, and unsaleable. It not infrequently happens that the retailer complains to his wholesale house or fish dealer, that the fish he received are not good-keeping stock, whereas the fault in nineteen cases out of twenty lies with himself, in not brining the fish on receipt, and then keeping them so. In the matter of fish as a part of the grocers' stock, I also hold the opinion with it as I do in reference to butter, cheese, eggs, lard, etc., that this article should not be sold with general groceries, but only by exclusive fish dealers. As even the most cleanly-kept fish leave about the place a certain undesirable odor, it stands to reason that butter, lard, &c., cannot safely be exposed near them, and the general untidiness and muss occasioned by handling them makes it decidedly unpleasant to do business both for the customer and the merchant. In fact the majority of the better class of grocers do not now handle fish, mainly on account of the unpleasantness of their handling, but in order to satisfy their customers they procure them from fish dealers, when filling orders. In this way they run no risk, as the fish bought by them must be first class, and they please their customer just as well. It would be desirable in the interest of clean groceries to see fish handled only by fish dealers, and in my opinion the day is not far off when this desire will be fulfilled.— HEC. SECORD.

THE PATRONS AND MERCHANTS.

The following letter appeared in the Winnipeg Commercial.

As I am living in a part of this province where the organization known as the Patrons of Industry have been at work lately, and as they are making such outrageous demands upon the country retailer with threats of boycotting unless their demands are complied with, I write this to see if it is not time for the wholesale and retail trade to come to some understanding for the purpose of protecting themselves against the unjust demands made by this organization.

The demand they are making on the retailer here is to come under contract with them, and on that contract you agree to sell them goods at an advance of 12½ per cent. on invoice price, and you also agree to produce your invoice for their inspection whenever called upon by any of their members to do so. After signing this contract they issue a charter to you, making your store a charter one, for which you pay them $13.

Now, any merchant that knows anything about his business, is well aware that he cannot supply them with goods at the above advance on invoice price and have his balance come out on the right side at the end of the year, for it takes on an average about one-half of the above percentage to lay the goods down in his store from the wholesale warehouse and from the balance of the percentage allowed he has to pay for fuel, light, taxes, insurance, dead stock, hired help, rent, interest on money invested, and make his living besides, which is simply impossible, and the country merchant that attempts it will certainly come to a disastrous end, which will inflict loss upon the wholealer that supplies him with goods, as well as injury to the honest retailer who is trying to pay his hundred cents on the dollar.

I have heard of some retail merchants that are agreeing to the above terms. Now, all that I have to say about them is this, that they are either knaves or fools, and if they are the former the wholesaler will likely be called upon to assist them in the fraud by making out duplicate invoices with an advance on actual prices, and if they are the latter the wholesaler is sure to suffer in the end, which is not far distant.

Now what I would like to see the wholesale trade do, is this, to refuse to sell goods to a merchant that agrees to such terms, unless his cash accompanies the order, and, also refuse to be a party to the above fraud of making out duplicate invoices; and what I expect of the retail trade is, to refuse to buy goods from the wholesaler that supplies goods to the above merchants, unless he is satisfied that the above merchant is compelled to pay spot cash for his supplies.

MAPLE SUGAR IN THE UNITED STATES.

The bounty to be paid upon maple sugar will represent less than a fifth of the production, as hinted in the annual report of Commissioner Mason. The total production of the United States is estimated at more than 50,000,000 pounds and the applications for bounty call for only about 10,000,000 pounds. It is quite possible that the payments will fall below the amount estimated by the producers, as in the case of cane sugar. One of the great sources of profit in regard to maple sugar is getting it early upon the market, and this profit is lost by the delays involved in official tests and certificates. The difference in price is fully equal to the bounty. and it will not be surprising if some, even of these producers who have applied for the bounty, decide to let it go for the sake of getting their product promptly on the market. The bounty system is not proving such a benefit to maple sugar producers as some of its advocates expected. The red tape required in the way, of applications, bonds and test is altogether disproportionate, in the minds of small producers, to the $15 or $20 they may obtain as a bounty. Many others who did not start to weigh carefully the difficulties in the way refrained from applying for the bounty, because they regarded it as of no importance, even if there were no difficulty in getting it. The result is that where $1,000,000 might have been distributed among the farmers, if they had cared for it, hardly more than one-tenth of the amount will be actually paid out of the Treasury.

Judge Powers, who represents the sugar-growing district of Vermont, has attempted to provide a more substantial benefit to the maple sugar men by proposing a duty of four cents per pound upon foreign maple sugar imported into the United States, and twenty cents a gallon on maple syrup. He proposes this in lieu of the bounty, and believes that it would be much more effective in benefiting the sugar producer because it would enable him to sell his sugar two or three cents higher than he can now do. The entire competition comes from Canada, from whence a deal of sugar is smuggled across the border, and some of it may even be able to masquerade as American sugar and get the bounty intended for American sugar alone. Judge Powers believes that a duty might fairly be imposed upon maple sugar, even if the bounty system were adhered to in regard to the ordinary sugar of commerce. Maple sugar he considers a luxury, fairly subject to high taxation, and an American product justly entitled to protection while the high tariff system continues in force. A duty upon maple sugar might be allowed to stand after the bounty system had been wiped off the statute book, and maple sugar would be safer with a duty, as well as more profitable to its producers, than under the present cumbersome system of bounties. The present Congress is not likely to go out of its way to impose new duties, but if the next Congress should have a majority of members of the other political party, Judge Powers might obtain the adoption of his plan.—N. Y. Commercial Bulletin.

DOMINION MILLERS AT OTTAWA.

The following delegates from the Dominion Millers' Association were received by Sir John Thompson, Hon. Mr. Foster and Hon. Mr. Bowell: Messrs. M. McLaughlin, John Brown and C. B. Watts, of Toronto; A. H. Baird, of Paris; J. D. Saunby, of London; W. R. Robson, of Hamilton; William Scott, of Ottawa, and Kinghorne and Norris, of Montreal. At the last annual meeting of the association resolutions were passed asking alterations in the manner of choosing delegates to select the standards of flour, and desiring that the Dominion millers should have representatives on these boards, and also requesting a change in the time of selecting these standards. In the meantime the millers have no representation on these boards although they have large interests at stake. The Government was also asked that the flour standards be selected twice a year instead of once. This is desired because the original standard will bleach so much in the course of time, and consequently it will take more wheat to make flour of the same color after the winter months have gone by. Incidentally also the question of Canadian trade with Newfoundland came up. In view of the recent announcement that the Government had made an offer to the sister colony, which it is hoped may lead to an equitable settlement of difficulties between Newfoundland and Canada, the deputation was not disposed to do anything calculated to weaken the situation. The Premier explained the situation to the deputation. He said the Government was prepared to do everything possible, consistent with the interests of the country, to make peace with Newfoundland.

ON THE ROAD.

I dislike to find fault, because a travelling man is not always credited with being spotless; but the following incident struck me as being rather new in the requirements of household necessities. The water trickled down a country road past a village store, the afternoon was cloudy, a thundering rain storm having just passed over that vicinity. I was chatting to the proprietor about the crops, (this was last fall) when an elderly man, who I learned afterwards was a farmer owning some hundreds of acres of land a few miles away, stopped his team at the hitching post just outside the front door, and, after tying the animals, walked into the store. "Have ye any fine chawing tobacco?" says he. "I likes 'The Empire' best." The merchant said he had, and showed him a few plugs of the weed. "Mon but that's grand stuff—give me a four bits worth of it. It's a foine thing to have in the house, when any company comes. Do you moind?"

PROPOSED CUSTOMS ALTERATIONS

The Council of the Winnipeg Board of Trade submitted the following recommendations of amendment to the Customs Act.

"First, That after goods have gone into consumption, no port entry shall be asked, except in case of fraud.

"Second. That all orders of council, departmental decisions and rulings of the board of appraisers as to rates of discount, valuation, and rate for duty, whether on goods or on packages, and all decisions regarding packages being liable to duty or otherwise, and, if dutiable, the value of the same, be promptly communicated to the customs officer of every port of entry within the Dominion, and that the same be at all times accessible to the public.

"Third. That all decisions of legal appraisers affecting the value or rate of duty, where found to be correct, be promptly communicated through the board to customs officers at other ports, so as to endeavor to make the rate or amount of duty collected on a given quantity of a given article, as near as possible, uniform throughout the Dominion, as well as thereby provide a supervision over the work of the local appraisers.

BUSINESS IN THE MEN, MERIT IN THE GOODS.

It is now almost a year since the firm of Wright & Copp commenced business at 40 Wellington Street East, Toronto, as importers and manufacturers' agents, dealing in grocers' specialties. Many manufacturers are represented, amongst them being The St. Croix Soap Manufacturing Co., of St. Stephens, N. B., the noted makers of "Surprise" soap, the sale of which is increasing largely every week; the T. A. Snider Preserve Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, manufacturers of catsup, Chili sauce, and twenty varieties of soups; the New York Bisuit Co., manufacturers of the celebrated Van Der Veer & Holmes Æ crackers; also a large trade has been worked up on imported and fancy cheese of all kinds. It is needless to mention the names of all firms represented. Suffice it to say that all goods handled are of established quality, and the list comprises a full assortment of grocers' specialties. To meet the requirements of their business they have found it necessary to extend their premises. Both gentlemen entered upon their business career well able to take care of their interest, and fully gifted with the qualities necessary to the merchant of to-day.

The ice dealers of Ottawa have formed a combine. They have increased the price of frozen water, and will make the consumers pay in advance.

The creditors of Gall, Anderson & Co., Toronto, met at the office of Ritchie & Davis and passed a resolution favoring the acceptance of 50 cents. An adjournment was made for two weeks, and meanwhile the composition deal will be circulated for signatures. There is every reason to expect the composition will be effected.

At a meeting of the creditors of James Scott & Co., Halifax, N.S., last week, Mr. Scott offered to pay 35 cents on the dollar, which was accepted. Much general sympathy is manifested for Mr. Scott in his business reverses, and at the meeting yesterday the hope was expressed that he will receive in the future that large measure of patronage which his house secured for so many years.

AN EXCITING SALE.

Says the Trade Bulletin of Montreal: The sale of the stock of S. Marrotte, amounting to about $3,500, which took place on Saturday last, proved quite an exciting affair the bidding being the most spirited that has been witnessed at an auction sale for some time past, resulting in the stock being bought in, supposed to be for the insolvent, at the unprecedented figure of $1.35½ on the dollar. No sooner did the auctioneer offer the above stock than 50c. on the dollar was immediately bid, and from this point the price was rapidly run up and the stock knocked down at $1.35½ within the short space of ten minutes. There was a large attendance of buyers, and during the sale the excitement resulting from the sharp tussel to secure the much coveted stock was intensified by a sudden outbreak of hostilities, the insolvent becoming suddenly engaged in an exhibition of fisticufs with one of the audience, whereat the auctioneer sprang from his point of vantage, and separated the infuriated combatants before first blood was claimed or a knock down recorded. It appears that a syndicate of buyers at the sale were determined to purchase the stock in order if possible to put Mr. Marrotte out of business. But unless both parties to the bidding thought the stock was considerably undervalued, why bid $1.35½ for second hand goods that could have been bought anywhere bran new for $1.00? Owing to the above abnormally high price being paid for the stock, the creditors, it is thought, will now get 20c. on the dollar; but all admit that the sale was a very remarkable one.

THE CORNER GROCER

The mercury in the thermometer outside of the door had dropped down so low that no one cared to associate with it. Officer Tooley dropped in to warm his hands at Schmidt's stove.

"Say, Officer," said Schmidt, as he took his hands out of his pickle barrel and wiped them on his apron, "you are yoost de feller vot I like to see. Is it gontrary to dem laws if I knock a feller vot scheets me?"

"Well, I don't know. You should have him arrested," said the officer. "Why, did some fellow (do) you?"

"Officer Tooley strolled back into the other room and looked at Schmidt through the bottom of a glass, and as he passed out he heard Schmidt say. DISHOHEST CLERKS.

We hear a good deal, from time to time, concerning protection; and however much grocers may differ on this great economic question, we are sure they will agree with us that the average merchant needs protection from the wiles of scheming tricksters, whose only end and aim is to defraud the dealer of his hard earned cash. We have iterated and reiterated in these columns the need of care and prudence to avoid the pitfalls prepared for the unwary by these frauds. This week we feel called upon to allude to another branch of this topic and warn the grocers against dishonest and untrustworthy clerks. No doubt a large per cent of all the clerks are honest—we certainly hope so, for from their ranks are to come the merchants of the future. How large or how small the per cent may be we are quite sure that there are more dishonest clerks than one would at first suppose. Every week we record the evil doing of these men who cause their employers trouble, annoyance and financial loss. The honest clerk will not object to any means adopted by the merchant to protect his interests, and the dishonest clerk should be exposed and punished.

Last week we recorded the fact that two clerks of Rhodes Brothers, Boston, had been arrested, charged with embezzling $300 from their employers. This money was, it is alleged, taken during the past three months.

This week we read that Frank H. Robinson, a grocer team driver, recently employed by Frank W. Merriden, Gloucester, was arrested on a charge of embezzlement. It is charged that he has collected from $300 to $500, which he has failed to turn over.

Charles H. Backus, of Wollaston, a well known grocer, lost a large amount of money by the embezzling practices of his clerk, Charles E. Winters, who has now left for parts unknown. His method of operation was similar to those outlined in the case spoken of in extenso below.

One E. H. Maynard was employed some eighteen months ago, as clerk and driver of the order wagon of Frank C. Shorley of Everett, proprietor of the Boston Branch Grocery and Provision Store. He had formerly worked for E. S. Gilmore, then for W. H. Oakes and latterly for Simonton & Gill of Charlestown. It now appears that his record was not entirely clear in the past, but, however, that may be, he began his embezzling practices soon after entering the employ of Mr. Shorley, until he had converted to his own use fully $500. From over thirty customers on his order route he had collected money—which he did not turn in—varying in each case from $2 to $30. These were customers who did not visit the store and whose bills he was given to collect. He would take the bills, collect the money, put it in his pocket, and at the store tell a plausible story about leaving the bill but being unable to get any money just then—they would pay in a few days, etc., elaborating these lies with all the generalities such men know so well how to concoct. When another bill was given him with "amount of bill rendered" upon it and the additional new purchases entered thereafter, he would erase the "bill rendered," tell the parties that the bookkeeper had made a mistake—"didn't know her business and couldn't keep the books straight," etc. He would sell to customers at a less price than cost and pocket the cash—in fact resorted to many schemes to feather his own pocket and rob his employer. Is such a man deserving of probationary leniency? If so is he when—as we state below—he was not using this money where it was needed, but to gratify an inordinate desire to appear the possessor of money?

His rascality being discovered he was arrested, taken before the District Court in Malden, Judge Pettingill presiding, and plead guilty. The case being beyond his jurisdiction he was bound over to a higher court. When the case came up in that court, Chief of Police Emerton of Everett informed the District Attorney that Maynard was "a pretty good fellow," etc., and presumably upon the Chief's statement the embezzler was released on probation. Now, was he a pretty good fellow? His wife died last March, and his father-in-law paid the funeral expenses; the two children, the result of his marriage, are with his brother-in-law, and Maynard has contributed hardly anything to their support, a very infinitesimal amount. But all the while he had in Everett a young lady to whom he was paying attention and he had bought (on the instalment plan) a costly piano, forgetting, probably, that he had in his previous wild career mortgaged his wife's piano to provide himself with funds. Was he a good fellow? Ought the Chief of Police, supposed to be charged with the execution of law, to take one side of a story, not the truth, and allow the release of a self-confessed embezzler? Mr. Shorley proposes to find out and the Selectmen of Everett will give him a hearing on the question Saturday evening.

Now, then, what can grocers do to protect themselves? Ought they to be lenient with these clerks? If they escape punishment do they not go to another store and work the same game? Wouldn't it be better to have one man take the orders and another collect the bills? We would like to receive suggestions from our readers. Hundreds, yes thousands of dollars are lost by grocers every year by these games worked by dishonest clerks. How can it be prevented? Is it mercy to the trade to let these men off on probation? Does not the protective policy apply here and should they not in every case demand even and exact justice.—New England Grocer.

ATTENTION TO BUSINESS.

There never was a time in the history of the industrial and commercial world when strict and personal attention to business was more necessary than at the present time. The growing competition in every line of trade and manufacture requires not only the strictest economy in every department and detail, but strict personal attention as well. This is one reason why Americans are and have been, successful in almost every enterprise they have undertaken. Instead of leaving the work to be performed by a paid manager or agent, the American manufacturer attends to the business himself, so far at least as the general management is concerned. He is a worker in every sense of the word.

Those who are inclined to think that employers are overbearing and grasping in their dealings with others, should not be too severe in their criticisms. The employee has a very easy time of it compared with his employer. His hours of labor are fixed, and his work is of a routine nature, requiring very little thought or care, except that necessary to the faithful performance of his duties. He knows just how much he is making, and when his day's work is done he can lay aside all care without fret or worry.

But with his employer it is quite different. With him it is constant, unceasing work, and his mind can never be entirely free from his business cares. He has to meet and overcome competition. He must watch the markets, both as a purchaser and a seller of goods. He must plan and devise, direct and control everything pertaining to his business. Not for a moment can he rest, for in that moment he may lose large sums of money which years of patient industry have accumulated.

The life of a successful business man is one constant round of work from morning till night, and often far into the latter. His hours of labor are not fixed by an arbitrary law, nor his labor that of fulfilling a duty to another for which he is paid a stipulated price.

The young man who, ambitious to enter business upon his own account, chafing at the position he holds or the wages he receives, will do well to give the matter careful consideration before undertaking the responsibilities and risks which are a part of every business man's life.

There is too much competition, too many shrewd and prosperous men already in the field for a young man to combat with, unless he be endowed with pluck and perseverance sufficient to carry him through a long and severe struggle, willing to work, not for day wages, not a certain number of hours per day, but for recognition as a successful business man, whether it call for one hour or twenty-four each day, whether the pay be one cent or $1.00 per hour.

In any case or under any conditions, either as the man of business, who works for his success through the employment and direction of others, or the laborer who gains his livelihood by working for another, strict attention to business, the faithful performance of the duties involved, and the considerate adaptation of means to an end is the only sure method of winning success.—Manufacturers' Gazette.

Charlie Johnston, the retail grocer, has just returned from New York, where he spent two weeks on pleasure.

Mr. J. O. Villneve, the member elected for Hochalaga County, is one of Montreal's best known wholesale grocers. He was elected by over 2,000 majority.

A McDonald, the Sherbrooke grocer was in town last week. He reports trade quiet on account of the election, but hopes that now that it is over things will pick up.

Four fruit boats are due between May 1st and 10th, the Avlona from Bordeaux, and Chareute, and the Fremona, Escalona and Dracona from Mediterranean ports. All the fruit will be sold by auction.

Col. H. E. Taylor, special agent of the United States treasury department at St. Albans, Vt., last week seized two tons of geese which were being smuggled across the line for sale in New York market. They will be sold by auction.

The examination for inspectors of butter and cheese factories will be held on March 16th and 17th at St. Hyacinthe, Que. Any information regarding them can be obtained from Mr. J. de L. Tache, the secretary of the Societie d'Industrie Laitiere, Quebec.

The bark Artizan, Capt. Kinsman, has arrived at St. John, N.B., from Iliolo, with a cargo of sugar for Montreal. The Artizan was one hundred and sixty-three days coming out, owing to boisterous head winds and calms.

At a meeting of creditors of Jas. Scott & Co., the Halifax grocers, it was agreed to accept 35 cents on the dollar. Much general sympathy is manifested for Mr. Scott in his business reverses, and at the above meeting the hope was expressed that he will receive in future the same large trade as he had before.

Nearly all the leading cheese operators have left for New York and England to make arrangements for next season's trade. Messrs. W. Nivin, F. Warrington, T. Warrington, G. Hodge (of Duckett, Hodge & Co.), D. Muir (of D. Muir & Co.), and the Messrs. Hodgson are at present on the other side, and Messrs. A. A. Ayer, D. A. McPherson and James Alexander left yesterday. Messrs. T. N. Ware and A. J. Brice have gone as far as New York and Mr. A. Grant will leave for the other side next week.

THE SAFE-BURGLARS' LOT NOT A HAPPY ONE.

From the reports so constantly being published it would seem that the skill of the nefarious burglar is proving too much for the safemakers and inventors who have been for sometime racking their brains for a new and improved method of counteracting their evil designs. A patent just issued at Washington to T. Mower Martin, artist, of Toronto, seems likely to prove an entirely new departure in this matter of protecting moneys and valuable papers. Mr. Martin's idea is to turn the burglar's usual method of warfare against himself by coating the safe with hidden panels of explosive substance, which, if attacked by either the drill or the blow pipe, or even by electricity, would incapaciate the toiler of the night from further pursuing his chequered career. Six different claims are granted in this patent, some of them being for methods in which the explosive machine can be set to go off or not at the option of the owner when closing the safe at night.—World.

GENIAL SALESMEN.

People like to trade with genial salesmen. They like to be waited upon by men who are affable, polite, attentive and personally agreeable men. They instinctively avoid a clerk or a salesman who is impertinent, officious, inattentive and indifferent. Many a clerk has failed to effect a sale of goods that was really desired, because his manner was offensive and his way of waiting upon a customer created a feeling of ill-humor and impatience.

Customers who bestow their patronage upon a storekeeper, feel that they are doing him a favor, and they expect to be treated, not only with civility, but with deference and polite attention. We have not infrequently in our shopping experience encountered clerks whose supercilious ways and disobliging manners filled us with a strong feeling of prejudice against the entire establishment. We have been waited upon by clerks whose minds seemed to be upon everything but their own business, whose eyes wandered away even while they talked to us, to other objects in the store, whose thoughts were clearly not upon their business, and who did not care whether they effected a sale or not; their only interest in the concern being to draw a weekly salary.

Now we hold that a good clerk or salesman feels a sincere interest in the prosperity and welfare of his employers, and he must be zealous in whatever he does. Unless he is, he can never expect to please the patrons of the store or the proprietor who employed him. If he acquires habits of indifference or inattention, he will never become a prosperous business man, even if he should engage in trade on his own account, for indifference and incivility become habits after a time, extremely difficult, if not impossible, to break off.

The personality of a salesman has very much to do with his success in that capacity. He should present a neat and cleanly appearance, should put his heart into his work, should strive to please the people with whom he comes in contact, and should try from the commencement of his career to make friends of his customers, if he expects in the future to have friends to patronize him when he sets up in business for himself—Grocers' Criterion.

The Condition of Sales Act now before the Ontario Legislature brought down a deputation representing wholesale interests. They were piloted by the member for East York, Mr. G. B. Smith, and were composed of Messrs. J. Short McMaster, T. O. Anderson, T. M. Bayne, and R. H Gray. They urged upon the Attorney-General the justice of passing legislation which would protect creditors against private liens or agreements not registered or otherwise made public. These liens are frequently resorted to to the great prejudice of the creditors on estates, and the wholesale men had no difficulty in impressing the Attorney-General with the merits of their case.

Ganong Bros., St. Stephen, N. B., have sold out to Ganong Brothers, Limited. Mr. Alexander Gunn, of Toronto, accompanied by Major Hughes, M. P., had an interview with Hon. Mr. Dewdney, on Thursday, to urge that the Indian Department procure for the use of the Indians long clear cut pork in place of short clear cut. Mr. Gunn represented that the change would divert a large trade from the United States packers into the hands of the Canadian packers, while the quality supplied would be of the very best. The Superintendent-General said he would give the representations careful consideration.

The lobster packers object to the proposal in Hon. C. H. Tupper's bill to require the payment of a $50 license fee for the catching of lobsters, and of a fee for the official branding of packages. The same deputation asked that any settlement of the Newfoundland question should include the concession to Canadian fishermen the same bait and fishing privileges enjoyed by the United States fishermen.

The Halifax Board of Trade last week discussed the Newfoundland-Canadian difficulty. The matter was introduced by a communication from the Montreal Board of Trade, regretting the loss of trade, and asking for an expression of opinion from the board as to the desirability of petitioning the Government for the arrangement of a modus vivendi till the difficulties between the two countries shall have been disposed of. The board passed the following resolution :— " Recognizing that the balance of trade with Newfoundland is in favor of the Dominion in the proportion of four to one your committee has no hesitation in recommending cordial co-operation with the Montreal Board of Trade in efforts to arrange a modus vivendi with Newfoundland; and further, your committee is decidedly of the opinion that it would be in the best interests of the whole Dominion to withdraw the present restrictive custom house regulations against imports from Newfoundland on the basis of mutual concessions."

A deputation appeared before the Government last week to protest most strongly against any rebate being allowed on grain transhipped at Ogdensburg, on the ground that it would hand over the whole carrying trade of the lakes, and especially of the Canadian North-west, to American bottoms. The delegates also urged the advisability and urgency of at once deepening the St. Lawrence canals to a uniform depth with the Welland, it being stated that as soon as a uniform depth of 14 feet is obtained the Canadian forwarders would be in a position to snap their fingers at the Yankees.

A Petrolea business man has purchased two lots near the tunnel station, Sarnia, Ont., with the intention of building stores on them, one of which he will fit up as a grocery store. There is talk also of a Point Edward business man following his customers to the south end of the town, when the completion of the roundhouse compels the removal of the trainmen, engineers and others to that neighborhood.

Frank Ronan, Halifax, N.S., Davis Bros'. hustling traveller, is receiving the congratulations of his friends on the possession of a valuable diamond ring, which glitters on one of his fingers. The ring was offered by the Logan Soap Company, of St. John, for the traveller placing the greatest amount of their manufactures in a given time, and Mr. Ronan was the lucky man. He also wears a gold watch given by the same firm on similar conditions ; and he has a gold watch offered by the Empire Tobacco Company, of Montreal, for the disposal of of 200 packages of their tobacco.

Mr. W. Boulter. president of the Canadian Packers' Association, was in the city the other day. He says the meeting of packers will be a large and important one. In addition to the routine matter to be considered the association will discuss a scheme to send a representative to Great Britain to introduce Canadian canned goods. The exports from here to Great Britain have been growing rapidly the past few years, and it is believed that if a man was sent over to push the sales of those put up by members of the association, the business could be largely increased. Mr. Boulter sent a trial shipment to Japan last fall and recently received word that the goods had given every satisfaction.

Mr. Ward, of the John P. Mott Co., Halifax, is in the city.

Clemes Bros. report the arrival of another car of extra red and yellow onions.

A. C. Miller & Co., canned goods packers, are starting another factory at Brighton, and James Anning, formerly with that firm, will put up goods in Belleville this year.

Mr. Harry Abbott, of Vancouver, has just sent to the Premier a box of fish, caught on a recent excursion of the tug Eliza Edwards, containing three halibut and a quantity of black cod. These fish have been distributed amongst the Ministers of the crown and in several other quarters, with a view to their being tried, and so far as can be learned the quality is excellent, notwithstanding its long journey. The fish are accompanied by a statement from the captain of the Eliza Edwards, certifying that the halibut are part of a catch of 847 similar fish, estimated to weigh, in the aggregate, 40,000 pounds, which were caught by eight men in three boats in three days, within five miles of the coast of British Columbia and in land-locked waters where fishing can be carried on in any weather. The largest halibut in the lot weighed 175 pounds, and measured six feet four inches in length.

The " Barm" Yeast Manufacturing Co. are offering premiums in solid cash to the grocers who first succeed in selling twenty of their 50 cent boxes containing two dozen 5 cent packages of " Barm" Yeast. The profit on these goods is 140 per cent., and the prizes $10 each for the first ten grocers selling twenty boxes, and $5 each to the second ten selling a like quantity. They also offer substantial cash amounts to commercial travellers, particulars of which are announced in this issue of the CANADIAN GROCER. The Barm Yeast Co. are not slow to adopt good methods for the introduction of their goods, and such enterprise deserve return. It is satisfactory to know that such is already the case, as the manager states that the business done during last month was ten-fold greater in volume than that of any month since they started. Both travellers and grocers seem to have entered into a rivalry, as to which can sell the most in the quickest time. Every wholesale grocer in the Dominion has " Barm" Yeast in stock, so that there will be no trouble in procuring it at any time.

HALIFAX RETAIL GROCERS.

The Halifax Retail Grocers' Association held their regular monthly meeting on the night of 7th inst. The attendance was larger than usual.

The committee having in charge the recent sleigh drive reported that the event passed off very satisfactorily, socially and financially.

Some further discussion took place upon the proposed tax reform, some of the members objecting to the published statement of the committee of the Tax Reform association that there were but eleven members present at the grocers' meeting when the resolution was passed. This is incorrect, as there were more present, and the executive committee (who expressed the sentiments of the whole association) were fully represented, and they felt that the grocers were not the only people affected by the proposed reform, but that all retailers were similarly affected. The resolution was passed unanimously, and it was wrongly stated that any member present was not in accord with it. They would like to know of any retail grocer in the city who carries a stock of $6,000 and is only assessed for $2,000.

TORONTO RETAIL GROCERS' ASSOCIATION.

The regular monthly meeting of the Toronto Retail Grocers' Association was held on Monday evening. There was a fair attendance of members. The usual routine business was transacted and one or two other matters of minor importance were dealt with. The further discussion of the circular questions was waived until next meeting. The secretary gave another evidence of his activity and earnestness in the submission of thirty names of grocers he had persuaded to apply for membership. A committee was appointed to wait on the wholesale grocers and state the position of the Association in the matter of wholesalers selling to consumers, and to warn the wholesalers that business of that kind would forfeit the trade of all the members of the Association and arouse the influence of that body against jobbers who sold to consumers. It was complained that a general trade paper had misstated the facts in connection with the pedlars' license question, alleging that the Association's protest against any reduction had been ineffectual. Disapproval of this mis-statement did not take the form of a resolution, but was very decided.

TORONTO MARKET.

TORONTO, March 17, 1892.

GROCERIES.

Very slowly does the market emerge from the dulness which has brooded over it all winter. An occasional glimmer of better times is let in upon the situation as spring draws on, but this is discounted by the low prices which in most lines stand ready for buyers when they choose to make their spring invasion. Traders of course must have goods, but their orders come forward very sparingly and call for only the barest present wants in everything but sugar There is no lack of offers for sugar, all on the bear side, and generally for pretty large invoices. The jobbers as a rule are shy of business, but if they see that the sugar is going to be bought they usually yield to the inevitable and come down to the lowest point. Some car loads have been taken for extended delivery, though as to that, there are few who will accept such an order. The trade in tea keeps steady. Canned goods are rather listless. Dried fruit is inactive. General sundries are up to the average. Fancy groceries are in lower request since Lent opened. Payments are reported satisfactory since the Fourth.

CANNED GOODS.

Though the trade proceeds slowly, values do not decline. Tomatoes and peas are in comparatively small compass, and there is small chance that prices will long favor the buyer as much as they do now. Corn, on the other hand, is quite plentiful. The prices of the former two vegetables are firm at $1.05 to $1.10, quality and quantity regulating the gradation between these figures. Gallon tomatoes sell quite freely at $3.50. But thers is plainly a backwardness about the demand. At this time of year consumption as a rule begins to be active. So far its impetus to trade is but mildly felt by the wholesalers. One reason, probably, is that retailers stocked more freely ahead of requirements in canned goods than in anything else. But it is not felt that the demand will be postponed much longer. It is fairly good now, though not up to the strength it usually reaches in the middle of March. Salmon, lobster, and sardines are quiet and unchanged. Fruits are in very limited request.

COFFEES.

Little can be added to what was said last week, as with the exception of a small jobbing business, nothing has been introduced into the situation since then. Very good Brazil coffee is offered at 19c., with lower grades obtainable as low as 17½c. Fine Rios would sell if they were to be had, but just now they are not in stock and are hard to get. Choice Javas continue exceedingly firm, while the demand evinces somewhat more activity. Good coffee appears to be rather at a premium, partly owing to an increasing consumptive demand for quality, and partly to the sharp inspection that has been set on foot lately.

The Rio News of Feb. 16th says of coffee: "Receipts have improved considerably, but the increase is largely due to coastwise receipts of nearly 16,000 bags during the week; the railway showed some improvement, but there is apparently still a 'hitch' somewhere. Exchange has assisted coffee dealers, and also a riot that occurred in Santos on the 11th, resulting in the rioters tearing up rails on the Sao Paulo Railway, cutting the telegraph, etc., from which it was feared a serious suspension of traffic might result. Fortunately the authorities were able to restrain the disorder, and traffic was resumed on the 13th. The Coffee Factors' Committee to report on the crops has not so far made public any modification of its December estimate, nor is it likely the Committee will report before the end of the current month."

DRIED FRUIT.

Prices are very low in currants, some descriptions quoting at 4¾c., and even this figure is said to be open to shading. The quality of the stock to be had at this easy price cannot of course be high, and as a matter of fact is very low. It has been brought on this market quite recently. There is very little of any other kind to be bought on the New York market, the finer descriptions being taken up or very firmly held. A slight recovery from the low point at which the inferior stock noted above was bought has taken place. Prunes are quiet and unchanged at 6¼ to 6½c. in cases. Valencia raisins can be bought at easy figures in New York and so are held here at very low prices. The price is from 5¼c. up for off-stalk. Some old stock is held here at 80c. to $1 per box. Dates are being pushed at 4⅞c. for large lots of Hallowee, and 5¼ to 5½c. for smaller quantities.

NUTS.

The week's trade in nuts has been of small proportions, unaccompanied by any change in the conditions. Prices are steady, stocks are light. In New York new Chili walnuts are offering for June delivery at 12s. 6d.

A cable from Malaga reports the remaining stock of Jordan shelled almonds at only 1,000 boxes, and the price 30s. c. and f., or say the equivalent of 37½c. laid down. In the face of this one holder in New York continues to quote 34c.

RICE AND SPICES.

The extent of the business done and the range covered by prices remain as they were described last week. It takes but little rice to slake the demand yet, but preparations are beginning for a brisker business as the season develops. Some very fine Japan rice is now in stock to sell at 5 and 5½c.

Spices are moderately active and unchanged in quotation.

The following is an extract from a private letter received from London by a leading importing house here: "In regard to rice we would say that in the markets abroad Japans are easier than earlier in the season, but other kinds are still advancing. Patnas of new crop are scarce and arrive slowly. The quality is very poor, indeed, being small in grain and off in color. Still prices are about 1s. per cwt. above last year. Rangoons are firmly held at a considerable advance. New crop is bought freely for local Indian wants. Prices are high, but shippers say they must go higher, for as they have lost heavily upon the 160,000 tons already sold they decline to make further sales. Smalls or granulated rice on the spot in Europe and new crop to arrive are again some 6d. per cwt. higher. The quantity of smalls or granulated to be made this year is expected to be low, as a much larger proportion of the Burmah rice crop has been sold as rough to adjacent countries, so that the product of the rough rice mills in the Burmese ports will be much less than usual. We hear of new crop smalls for English markets to the extent of 5,000 to 6,000 tons having been resold by buyers to sellers, and the shipments presumably cancelled at a loss of about 6d. per cwt. This explains fully the current high prices for granulated rice for old and new crop deliveries."

SUGAR.

The basis of prices in sugar, that is the raw sugar market, is unaltered, values being quite firm, with the chances of any early change decidedly in favor of sellers. Notwithstanding that fundamental fact, the prices of refined are easy on this market, the ascendant influence being the desire to hold customers who may be tempted away by special cuts. Houses that would stand out for 4⅝c. for granulated from a stranger, will sell at 4½c. to an old customer. Others come down to 4¼c., and soften the fall or rather recoil to a higher figure, by coupling the order with a condition that so much tea shall go along. The retailer, however, usually finds that he can do better by keeping the commodities apart. Yellow sells as low as 3½c. Yet the price at the refineries has an upward bent. Many who have loaded up freely wish the price would rise. A very good demand is kept up, those who can spare the money buying in round lots. The endeavor to get delivery protracted over the next month or longer usually fails, though in a few cases that is reported to have been conceded. The outcome of the refiners' meeting at Montreal has been fruitless of bearing upon the situation. The refiners were not able to establish another list or to establish a system of grading for yellow sugars. Another meeting is to be held shortly.
